If the Chair decides wrongly in a matter which I regard as of consequence I know it would not be taken as offensive by any level-headed Presiding Officer that even a friend should appeal from his decision. The Chair has no right to regard it as offensive, and the Chair would almost always rather, much rather, have an appeal taken and the point decided by the Senate than to feel that the Senate thought he had decided wrongly and, therefore, by himself alone killed some measure which was regarded as of importance.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I thought the Senator had finished.
Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Iowa, by rising and addressing the Chair, has done me the very great service of admonishing me that I have finished all that I have any good rea-

Mr. ALLISON. I apologize to the Senator from Wisconsin. I supposed he had finished his remarks.

Mr. SPOONER. I had. Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Chair what is the pending question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has made a point of order against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveridge].

Mr. ALLISON. That is not a debatable question, I believe. The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not. The debate has been proceeding thus far by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALLISON. I call for the regular order. I ask for a decision of that question.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I presume after the decision is made I can submit a few brief observations which I have been waiting to make on the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. I will withdraw the demand for the regular order until the Senator from New Hampshire shall have concluded, when I shall renew it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I shall not occupy the attention of the Senate many minutes. I shall not undertake to decide as to the propriety or impropriety of the request made by the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveridge]. As I remember the matter, he made it in the most delicate manner possible, and did not make a request, but rather made a suggestion.

Mr. President, I have not been here for sixteen years to be ignorant of the fact that this is not an innovation, and it strikes me the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] has taken the matter altogether too seriously. The same suggestaken the matter altogether too seriously. The same suggestion has been made over and over again to the presiding officer, and it is competent for the presiding officer to do practically as he pleases about it. I desire to call attention to some precedents-and I will occupy a very few minutes in doing so-in the action of the Senate on certain important matters along the line that has been discussed. I have not had time to look up many. I suggested to the Senator from Indiana that there were scores of cases in which questions of this kind have been submitted to the Senate.

As far back as the Thirty-first Congress, Mr. Howe made a point of order against an amendment proposed by Mr. Conkling, and the point of order, beyond a question, was good, but it was submitted to the Senate. A little later on, in the Forty-sixth Congress, the Senate having under consideration the bill (H. R. 1343) to provide for certain expenses of the present session of Congress, Mr. Plumb offered to amend it by adding "for mileage of Senators at the extra session." Mr. Wallace raised the point of order that the amendment not having been moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of a Department was not in order. The question was submitted to the Senate.

In the Forty-third Congress Mr. Allen offered to amend the agricultural appropriation bill by inserting:

For the purpose of purchasing and distributing seeds and seed grains among the drought-stricken inhabitants of the United States by the Secretary of Agriculture, and in his discretion and under such rules as he may prescribe, the sum of $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be made immediately available.

Mr. Vilas raised the point of order that the amendment was not moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments, and was therefore not in order under the first clause of Rule XVI. The then Vice-President, Mr. Stevenson, submitted the question to the Senate.

In the Forty-third Congress the telegraph cable company matter came up, when Mr. BLACKBURN raised the question of order, and it was submitted to the Senate by the Vice-President, Mr.

Stevenson.

In the Thirty-second Congress a bill to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1852, was pending, and an amendment was proposed to that which it was argued was not a proper amendment. Mr. William R. King, who was a very distinguished Senator and who occupied the chair at that time, submitted the question to the Senate.

In the Fifty-first Congress an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill was offered, and Vice-President Stevenson submitted it to the Senate, the same point being made that is made to-day. In the Fifty-fourth Congress an amendment was offered to the Indian appropriation bill, and Mr. Faulkner, who was a most excellent presiding officer, submitted the question to the Senate.

The pension appropriation bill being under consideration in the Fiftieth Congress, an important amendment was offered to it, and a point of order was raised that it proposed general legislation to a general appropriation bill. The question was submitted to the Senate. I could cite, as I suggested to the Senator from Indiana, scores of instances if I had the time to look them I will not pursue the question further, although I had two or three other instances marked.

Mr. President, I rather agree with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] that it is not quite the proper thing for Senators to make a direct request of the Chair that a question of this kind should be submitted, but I noted with particularity the delicate manner in which the Senator from Indiana suggested to the Chair that this might be done-that there were precedents for it-and I am sure that had it been my fortune or misfortune to have occupied the chair, I should not have felt that any discourtesy was shown me in that suggestion.

As a rule, the presiding officer of this body decides questions. It is presumed that every occupant of the chair is competent to do it under the rules of the Senate, and yet there are so many cases in which these questions have been submitted to the Senate where they might have been decided offhand that I think we might be patient with each other at least when a suggestion of this kind is made. I have intimated to the Vice-President once during the present session that he might submit to the Senate a question in which I was interested, but I mentioned it to him at the chair. I took the trouble to visit the Vice-President for a moment for the purpose of making the suggestion. The Vice-President very kindly intimated to me that he did not think he would do it, and that settled it.

Mr. President, we ought not to get in heat over this matter, for there is a very important question involved. I wish it might be submitted to the Senate, I am free to say, because I should like to vote on it. I think it is one of the greatest questions which has been presented to the Senate during the time I have had the honor of serving here. But if the Chair feels it his duty to decide this question himself according to the rules of the Senate, as he will do, of course, I shall be content, as will the Senator from Indiana and every other Senator.

It is to be noted that we have a remedy in an appeal from the decision of the Chair, but no Senator is rash enough to appeal from the decision of the Chair when the Chair decides rightly. So an appeal from the decision of the Chair is rarely taken, and I certainly would be one of the last Senators to enter an appeal unless I was satisfied fully that the Chair had mistakenly ruled on a question of great public concern.

The Senator from Indiana very gently suggested that I was an authority on parliamentary law. I am not. If there is any man on earth, unless it is the present occupant of the chair, who can compass the rules of this body and administer them with impartiality, I do not know who he is, because I have heard arguments made on this floor by Senators during the present session in direct conflict to what they have argued in previous Congresses. I have heard contentions made here that were startling to me, and yet they have prevailed; and I confess that I think a revision of our rules, making them a little more comprehendable than they are at the present time, would be a very wise undertaking for some great Senator to engage in, and I regret that it has not been done long ago.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say on the subject.

Mr. WARREN. Regular order, Mr. President. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] makes several points of order against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveringe]. The Chair will consider but one, and that is that the amendment proposes general legislation. The rules of the Senate with respect to amendments proposed to appropriation bills are comprehensive and specific. Subdivision 3 of Rule XVI provides

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

The question arises whether the amendment offered proposes general legislation. The Chair doubts whether there is a Senator within the Chamber who, upon the most casual reading of the amendment proposed, would not hold that it does distinctly and clearly propose general legislation. If it does propose general legislation and is in contravention of the rule, the Chair believes that it is his duty and in the interest of orderly procedure to hold that the point of order is well taken and that the amendment is out of order.

The precedents to which the attention of the Chair has been directed with respect to the submission of questions of order to the Senate have no application to the pending question. presiding officers have in past years occasionally submitted questions of order to the Senate. It has been done under the authority conferred by Rule XX, in the discretion of the Chair and not from suggestions from the floor. During the present session the Chair has frequently been invited by Senators to submit to the Senate points of order on amendments which were not in order, and in every case of such invitation the Chair has felt obliged to decline to do so. To assent to such suggestions is to break down the rules which the Senate has deliberately adopted for the conduct of public legislation.

The Chair feels that it is not for him lightly to break the rules and safeguards which the Senate has adopted for his and its guidance. The Chair, of course, has nothing to do with the merits of the amendment which is proposed. Whether the amendment is one of general public interest or otherwise is a matter with which the Chair can not concern himself. Senators interested in the amendment are not remediless. Chair, in holding that under the rule an amendment is not in order, does not kill the amendment. The Senate has provided against such a contingency by the rules which were long since adopted. If a majority of the Senate are of opinion that the ruling of the Chair is not in consonance with the spirit of the rules of the Senate, they may hold that the amendment is in order; or, if the Senate should be of opinion that in the large jority of the Senate may determine it. The proposed amendment, which was offered by the Senator from Indiana on the 14th of February, was embodied in a bill introduced by him on the 6th of last December. The Chair is of opinion that if the measure is of such large consequence in the opinion of the Senate, as is now claimed, the Senate could have expressed itself upon that subject long prior to the closing hours of the present session and in an orderly and appropriate way.

public interest an amendment should be received regardless of the rule, it is competent for the Senate so to decide, and a ma-

For these considerations the point of order is sustained. The Chair would say further that under the rules of the Senate an appeal lies from this decision, and the Chair would invite such an appeal if he is in error in the view he entertains of the force and effect of the rule.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of line 4, page 27, of the new print of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota

proposes an amendment which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 27, at the end of line 4, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That after any food carcasses, and any or all parts thereof, of such animals shall have been duly inspected as provided for in this act, and the same shall be found to be sound, healthful, wholesome, and fit for human food, and shall have been marked, stamped, tagged; or labeled as "Inspected and passed" as provided for in this act, thereafter any change of any of such food carcasses or parts thereof into food products of any kind by any slaughtering, canning, salting, rendering, or manufacturing establishment, thereby necessitating further inspection of such food products in its process of manufacture and in its manufactured form, all expense incurred in such inspection, including the stamping, tagging, or labeling of such manufactured food product; shall be borne by the individual, company, or corporation producing such manufactured food product; and for the purpose of reimbursing the Treasury for all expense incurred in consequence of such inspection of said manufactured food product; and for the purpose of reimbursing the Treasury for all expense incurred in consequence of such inspection of said manufactured food product; and for the purpose of reimbursing the Treasury for all expense incurred in consequence of such inspection of said manufactured food products, including the stamping, tagging, or labeling thereof, the Secretary of Agriculture shall, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, ascertain as near as may be the total amount of such expense, and report the same from the person, firm, or corporation who manufactured such food product; and said sums when so collected shall be deposited in the Treasury.

Mr. WARREN, Mr. President—

Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Da-kota yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I presume the Senator from Wyoming rises for the purpose of making the same point of order against this amendment that he made against the amendment considered a little while ago; and with the understanding that the Senator will not press his point of order and that he will give me an opportunity to talk about a minute and a half or two minutes, I yield to him.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to make the point of order on the amendment. It is an amendment that was not estimated for, has not been reported favorably by any committee, and is general legislation and, in my opinion, of the broadest kind, if I may be permitted to say so. I do not wish to take the Senator off the floor.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. No. Mr. WARREN. But I ask that the point of order may be passed upon at the proper time.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am glad the Senator makes his point of order just as strong as possible.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that discussion upon the point of order is by unanimous consent.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for two or three minutes The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator will be heard.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, under existing law relative to meat inspection the Government pays the cost of inspectors at all the meat-packing establishments. The amendment which I propose provides that when the packer takes the carcass, which has been inspected at the expense of the Government, for the purpose of working it up into canned meat or any other kind of food product, the Government being obliged, of course, to make an inspection of that process also, then the packer shall pay the cost of such second inspection. Surely it can not be claimed that the cost of such an inspection could be assessed back upon the stock raiser.

If I am not mistaken, this is the first bill or amendment to any bill which has been offered either in this Congress or the last Congress which provides that the packer shall pay for the inspection. All former bills provided, if I am not mistaken, that the Secretary of Agriculture should make an assessment; in other words, that he should levy a head tax on all animals, cattle, sheep, and swine slaughtered in the packing establishments. This amendment makes no such provision, but requires the Secretary of Agriculture to ascertain the cost of this second inspection and to assess that against the packers, whatever it may be, not so much per carcass, but the actual cost.

Of course, I do not care to take up the time of the Senate to discuss the merits of this great question. In my own judgment it will be the duty of the next Congress to bring in here, in view of the decision of the Chair, a general bill covering this subject, giving the two Houses an opportunity to vote their convictions, so elaborately discussed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], as to whether the American people should pay this tax, whether they use meats or not, and as to whether the packers themselves should not pay the cost of the advertisement they receive by having the brand of the United States put upon their products

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the Senator from Wyoming, and for the reasons heretofore given. Are there further amendments to the bill as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I rise merely to suggest an amendment to correct an inadvertence in previous legislation upon a matter that is working a hardship. I am quite sure it was not the intention of Congress that such should be the result. On page 67, after the word "dollars," in line 3, I propose word, because I can do it more quickly than by having it read.

It proposes to allow the homesteader at the end of five years to pay up to the Government all that is due under the reclamation act and be on the footing of other homestead settlers. Congress provided for the payment to be made in ten installments, and the Department holds that by reason of that the homesteader can not get his title for ten years. Of course that was not the intention of Congress, and it should be corrected.

I hope no point of order will be urged against the amendment. It carries no appropriation. It merely provides that upon complying with the law, at the end of five years the homesteader may receive his patent. Under the homestead law he may do that now, but in the reclamation act, through an inadvertence, doubtless, it was provided that the payment should be divided into ten parts. The amendment simply provides that at the end of five years he may pay up all payments and take his title and be on an equal footing with other homesteaders. The law can just as well be enacted in connection with this legislation. if the point of order is not raised against it, and make this property taxable and contributable for school and other local purposes. In the communities where this question arises they have no taxable property at all for the purpose of maintaining schools until the end of ten years, when they should have it at the end of five years.

So I propose the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will ask the Senator if the amendment has been reported from a committee in the form of a bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. It was reported favorably as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. From what committee? Mr. HEYBURN. The Committee on Irrigation. Mr. SPOONER. Let me ask if that is all there is in it?

Mr. HEYBURN. That is all there is in it, but is, of course, drawn in formal language.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 67, line 3, after the word "dollars," insert:

That section 5 of the act entitled "An act appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands," approved June 17, 1902, be amended by adding thereto the arid lands," approved June 17, 1902, be amended by adding thereto the following proviso:

"Provided, That upon the expiration of five years from the date of the entry of said lands by said entryman, upon proof of residence and cultivation of said land as required under the homestead laws of the United States and proof of cultivation as required by this act, and upon the payment by said entryman to the receiver of the United States land office for the district in which the said land is situated of all installments due or to become due upon said land under the provisions of this act, whether in payment for the said lands or for water rights thereon, said entryman shall be entitled, without further delay, to receive a patent from the United States for the said land, and to be discharged from all liabilities for any other or further residence upon said lands or payments for said lands or water except maintenance charges under this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to ask that extracts from the annual reports of the Secretary of Agriculture and of the Chief of the Weather Bureau be placed in the Record for future reference, if occasion should require it. There has been some adverse criticism as to the amount of money expended under the direction of the Department at the Mount Weather Observatory, in Virginia, and I think this report answers all that adverse criticism.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Extracts from annual reports of the Secretary of Agriculture and of the Chief of the Weather Bureau concerning the Mount Weather Meteorological Research Observatory, Mount Weather, Virginia.]

First reference in Report of Secretary for 1903.

First reference in Report of Secretary for 1903.

It has been thought proper for many reasons to establish on the Blue Ridge Mountains, at Mount Weather, Bluemont, Va., a modern meteorological observatory of the best class for scientific research pertaining to problems of weather phenomena. A building for administration and for a school of instruction is being erected, and the plans are well advanced for a suitable power house and shop for balloon and kite ascensions, which will be built during the coming year. The recent advances in solar and terrestrial meteorology justify us in preparing to study at first hand the variations in the solar activity, and the corresponding changes in the weather conditions, especially from season to season. It is a complex problem and will require the best instrumental equipment, the ablest students, and a long series of observations before it can be finally solved. The desirability of being able to foresee a year in advance the type of season probable during a given period is so great as to make it imperative to lay broad scientific foundations at the beginning of the twentieth century, which will be of utility for future generations, who will surely build a great science of cosmical meteorology upon such data as can be supplied by the Mount Weather Observatory.

BUILDINGS ERECTED AND PROPOSED.

During the past fiscal year, through the appropriations by Congress, it has been possible to erect buildings for use as meteorological observatories for the Weather Bureau at the following-named places, and at a total cost of $32,922.97, viz: Amarillo, Tex.; Modena, Utah: Key West, Fla.; Sand Key, Fla.; Southeast Farallone, Cal. And buildings are now in course of erection at the following places, the total cost of which will be $70,000, viz: Yellowstone Park, Wyo.; Duluth, Minn.; Devils Lake, N. Dak.; Havre, Mont.; Mount Weather, Va.; Block Island, R. I.; Narragansett Pier, R. I.

The wisdom of erecting buildings for the exclusive use and under the control of the Weather Bureau becomes more apparent every day. It saves to the Government the amount heretofore paid for rent of office quarters, which in many cases are unsuited to our needs.

MOUNT WEATHER RESEARCH OBSERVATORY.

MOUNT WEATHER RESEARCH OBSERVATORY.

The Weather Bureau is so far convinced of the importance of finding out the laws of these cosmical physics, by which alone the problem can be conclusively solved, that it has been thought proper to found a research observatory at Mount Weather, on the crest of the Blue Ridge Mountains, about 6 miles from Bluemont, Va., and equip it suitably for these investigations. Professor Bigelow has recently been placed in charge of supervising the plans for its construction and development upon the best modern principles. It is evident that such an institution, having its beginning in the early years of the twentieth century, will have an increased usefulness as the years go by, if it is organized according to the demands of the best science. It will require fine instruments and able students if it is to command the respect of the subject of solar physics has already grown to such proportions that the British Association for the Advancement of Science has set off a solar physics section from astronomy and mathematics; the solar physics observatory at South Kensington, under the able directorship of Sir Norman Lockyer, is putting forth valuable results; the solar observations by the Italians for the past thirty years have become invaluable as a basis for these studies; the observatory at Kalocsa, Hungary, and that at Zurich are known to all students for their important publications. Less directly, several of the great astronomical observatories are deriving some of their most valuable discoveries in astrophysics, which is simply another name for stellar meteorology. Thus Potsdam, Paris, Lick, Yerkes, Harvard, and other institutions are working zealously along these lines and filling out the realm of human knowledge in a fashion undreamed of a generation ago. It may be asked why, with all this wealth of material being secured in other places, it should be important for the Weather Bureau to enter upon these studies as well. The answer is simple. These observatories, for one thing, specia combined result at a given time can be worked out harmonlously and correlated with the prevailing weather conditions. Furthermore, the publications of these several observatories are issued from the press as much as two to four years after the observations are actually made, so that it is obvious that these late reports can have little value in practical forecasting. We have no intention to enter upon the advanced research problems which rightly belong to specialists, but rather to adapt to the uses of the meteorologist and the forecaster such portions of the immediate uses of the Weather Bureau.

Specifically, the plan in mind contemplates the development of an observatory as indicated in the following statement:

(1) An observatory building is in process of erection at Mount Weather, which is well adapted as a school of instruction and for making observations of the ordinary kind with the common meteory. III. In Report of Secretary for 1904. MOUNT WEATHER METEOROLOGICAL RESEARCH OBSERVATORY.

During the past the year the main building of the Mount Weather Observatory has been completed, while the power plant, the building from which balloon ascensions and kite flights are to be made, and the magnetic building are being constructed. The physical laboratory for electrical and radioactive effects is being planned, the erection of which will take place in another year. Finally, a comprehensive physical observatory for photographing the sun directly and through the spectrum, for measuring radiation energy by actinometry and bolometry, with their allied equipment, will be required. This complex institution must grow up slowly as plans can be matured along the best modern lines. When the equipment is ready we shall make and send out apparatus for the exploring of the atmosphere to altitudes of from 3 to 10 miles. It is probable that many balloons will be simultaneously liberated from different stations so as to get records of storms and cold waves from their four quadrants. With observations from the magnetic, the electric, and the solar physics observatories, opportunity for study will be given to those who believe that the cyclonic and anticyclonic whirls that constitute storms and cold waves are mainly the result of changes in the amount or intensity of some form of solar radiation. It is the purpose to make the research at Mount Weather catholic in its broadness.

OBSERVATORY BUILDINGS.

Carrying out the policy of the Department, the Weather Bureau has continued to cooperate with the leading universities throughout the country, and at the present time the relations existing are more cordial and the work done more important than at any time in the history of the service. Several universities and colleges have donated ground for the erection of buildings, notably the Bradley Polytechnic Institute of Peoria, Ill., and the Epworth University of Oklahoma City, Okla. Appreciation of the value of the work being done by the Weather Bureau has also been demonstrated by several other universities in placing at the disposal of the Bureau, without cost, office quarters in their buildings for recentily established stations, among them being the Brown University, of Providence, R. I., and the University of Wisconsin, at Madison, Wis.

The erection of buildings by the Weather Bureau not only saves the amount previously paid for rent of office quarters, but adds very much to the prestige of the service here and abroad. This prestige will be further increased upon the completion of the group of observatory buildings at Mount Weather, Va., at which place it is intended to conduct extensive experimental and research work. The present appropriation provides for the erection of not less than five buildings, but this number has proven inadequate to the growing demands from all sections of the country, and it is hoped that Congress will soon increase the appropriation sufficiently to provide for the erection of not less than ten buildings annually.

THE MOUNT WEATHER METEOROLOGICAL RESEARCH OBSERVATORY.

At Mount Weather, Va., it is proposed to make and send out the apparatus for the exploring of the atmosphere to altitudes of 3 to 10 miles. In this work it is probable that many balloons will be simultaneously liberated from different stations, so as to get records of storms and of cold waves from their four quadrants. With the knowledge thus gained of vertical gradients of pressure and of temeprature, it will doubtless be possible to gain a better understanding of the mechanics of storms. This exploration will be useful in determining how near right are those who believe that change in temperature other than seasonal is mainly a function of the mechanics of the lower atmosphere—that portion lying below the 10-mile level; that in the study of those aberrations of climate called "weather," investigators need concern themselves only with the atmosphere near the earth; and that variations in the condition and in the intensity of the many forms of solar radiation are inappreciable in their effect on the weather of the earth.

With observations from the magnetic, the electric, and the solar physics observatories which the Department is now building, and which will be equipped with the most approved appliances, opportunity will be given to those who believe that the cyclonic or anticyclonic whirls that constitute storms or cold waves are mainly the result of changes in the amount or intensity of some form of solar radiation. It is the opinion of the writer that the synchronism of changes in the activity of the chromosphere of the sun and the weather of the earth has not yet been established with sufficient definiteness to be of benefit to the forecaster, but a working hypothesis has been formulated which stimulates thought, study, and investigation. This fact must be credited to the patient work of Prof. Frank H. Bigelow. Even those who differ from him in their conclusions relative to the association between astrophysics and meteorology mast admit that the fertility of his thought and his earnest seeking after the problems which, when solved, shall raise meteorology from empiricism to a closer approach to an exact science, have been highly beneficial. The study of storms has too long been made from a single view point. Daring minds are needed, even those that are willing to take a considerable hazard in the hypotheses which they are willing to take a considerable hazard in the hypotheses which they are willing to lay down and attempt to demonstrate: for to doubt is to investigate. New truths are usually discovered by working inductively along conventional lines, but some of the greatest principles in nature have been made known to the world by deductive reasoning and by the assumption of a hypothesis that could not at the time be demonstrated. Due deference must be given to each other's opinions, and all must strive earnessty for the elucidation of the many difficult problems that now confront the meteorologist.

LINES OF PROPOSED INVESTIGATIONS.

It is proposed to make the research at Mount Weather catholic in its broadness; to look for the truth, and not to despise its source or the means of its conveyance; to discuss meteorological observations from the point of view of their relations to solar physics; to select meteorologic and magnetic elements and compare them with solar observations; to carry on research in the allied subjects of radiation, atmospheric electricity, ionization of gases, radioactivity, etc. Progress in knowledge of the effects of the sun's actions upon weather conditions depends upon introducing more refined processes than have generally been assigned to meteorology. It is hoped to determine the nature of the alliance between meteorology and solar physics. The atmosphere of the sun and of the earth, together with the connecting radiations, will be studied as one branch of science having common interests, which may be designated as cosmical meteorology.

In the seven buildings at Mount Weather the Weather Bureau will have the most approved apparatus for measuring atmospheric electricity and magnetism, for measuring the solar radiation in the spectrum, for registering the sun-spot areas, the prominence output, and the extent of the faculæ. These are all valuable as registers of the solar energy, which, falling upon the earth, may play a part in stirring up the atmosphere and producing our weather.

INTERPRETING THE LANGUAGE OF THE SUN.

INTERPRETING THE LANGUAGE OF THE SUN.

The climate and crop conditions from year to year depend largely upon the invisible and subtle solar radiations, known to exist as waves, like those used in wireless telegraphy. The space between the sun and the earth—that is, the cosmical ether—is filled with wireless messages which science is laboriously learning to interpret. Its votaries do not understand the solar code very well, and the process of deciphering it is like that of learning to read the Babylonian inscriptions, namely, by putting this and that together, learning to read a bit here and there, by intercomparisons, trial, and failure, till at length the language of the sun shall be understood. The time may come when it may be possible to interpret the seasonal weather from year to year in advance. It has not yet arrived. The sun moves leisurely through its cycles and the terrestrial conditions seem to follow loosely. At present all available information concerning these matters comes in scattered form from observatories, in reports two or three years old. It is necessary, therefore, to have instruments, trained research observers and computers, and a discussion of results, subject to the direct control of the Weather Bureau.

BUILDINGS COMPLETED AND PROJECTED.

BUILDINGS COMPLETED AND PROJECTED.

During the past year the main building of the Weather Bureau observatory has been completed, the power plant and the building from which balloon ascensions and kite flights are to be made have been erected, and the magnetic buildings started. It has been found that the rocks are entirely free from magnetism, and that the field is uniform, so that it is a suitable place on which to locate a magnetic observatory. A physical laboratory for electrical and radioactive effects is being planned, the erection of which will take place during another year. Finally, a comprehensive physical observatory for photographing the sun directly and through the spectrum, for measuring the radiation energy by actinometry and bolometry, with their allied equipment, will be required. This complex institution must grow up slowly; as plans can be matured along the best modern lines, our assistants must be trained to work in several lines on a harmonious general plan, and the results must be carefully studied as the science progresses.

MOUNT WEATHER RESEARCH OBSERVATORY.

Under the authority of Congress, three years ago, the Department undertook the establishment of a station at Mount Weather, Virginia, devoted to meteorological research, and has established there a plant especially adapted to atmospheric research. The temperature, moisture, and movements of the air at great heights will be ascertained by means of balloons and kites; the absorption of solar heat by the atmosphere will be measured; the dissipation of solar light and heat will be determined; the special analysis of the sunbeam will be carried out, and the electric condition will be determined. In addition to this we have added apparatus for studying the relations to the atmosphere of the magnetism of the earth, the temperature of the soil, and even the motions of the earth. All those phenomena have been shown to have a more or less intimate connection with meteorology.

In so far as aerial research may require it, sounding balloons will be liberated from many of the weather stations in distant parts of the country in cooperation with those at Mount Weather, since it is considered very important to know the condition of the atmosphere above the land every day of the year up to the greatest attainable height, especially during the passage of storms and cold waves. Therefore, Mount Weather may be expected to do as much for the science of meteorology and the future improvement of the service as the service has already done during the past thirty-five years for the material interests of the United States. The employees at this station must necessarily live close by their apparatus, and provision must be made for all the ordinary needs of domestic life precisely as is done in all large astronomical observatories and in military establishments. This has been done economically and in accordance with established usage.

VI. In Report of Chief of Weather Bureau for 1995.

VI. In Report of Chief of Weather Bureau for 1905.

It has encouraged the study of meteorology in educational institutions by allowing its scientists, outside of their official duties, to deliver courses of lectures to students, so that there are now twenty institutions of learning where meteorology forms a part of the curriculum, thereby giving preliminary training to the young men who, in after years, will succeed to the duties now performed by the meteorologists of the Government.

Finally, three years ago the Bureau began the establishment, at Mount Weather, Virginia, of an institution devoted purely to meteorological research.

Finally, three years ago the Bureau began the establishment, at Mount Weather, Virginia, of an institution devoted purely to meteorological research.

In order that this country may do its share toward the advancement of meteorology along the lines that specially relate to conditions in America, it is imperative that the Weather Bureau should establish an observatory for its own special research work. It would seem a severe criticism to say that the United States Weather Bureau has 200 stations for routine observations, and spends such a large amount of money annually for routine work, without doing anything for the permanent improvement of the science upon whose development its efficiency depends. It was long since stated that the highest efficiency in any art implies a perfect knowledge of the higher science behind it. We have therefore secured a piece of land and inaugurated work at an establishment that is intended to respond to the present and prospective needs of meteorology. We have called this the Mount Weather Research Observatory, and have organized it on a broad and elastic basis, so that it may from year to year expand with the growing knowledge of our needs. The other weather bureaus of the world have been inclined to make research more prominent than practical routine. Their appointments, their promotions, and internal organization, and their whole animus, are in harmony with the principle that in the present state of meteorology research is more important than forecasts; that to establish a new law is better than to forecast rains, frosts, or storms; that, in general, our knowledge of the atmosphere and its mechanics needs to be increased, so that we may venture upon forecasts that will establish a new standard of accuracy.

In order to prosecute the researches contemplated at Mount Weather we have established there a plant especially adapted to atmospheric research. By means of balloons and kites the temperature, moisture, and movements of the air at great heights will be ascertained. The absorp

trometer. The electric condition will be determined by means of the electrometer, and the radioactivity, or ionization of the air, by means of the dissipation apparatus Ebert. To all this we have added apparatus for studying the relations to the atmosphere of the magnetism of the earth, the temperature of the soil, and even the motions of the earth shown by the seismographs. All these phenomena have been shown to have a more or less intimate connection with meteorology. In so far as aerial research may require it, sounding balloons will be liberated from many of the weather stations in distant parts of the country in cooperation with those at count. Weather, since it is considered to the country in the passage of storms and cold waves. These so-called "sounding balloons" may attain altitudes of 20 miles. Through them a record will be obtained of the winds and temperatures at that height as well as throughout the whole intermediate strata. Therefore Mount Weather may be expected to do as much for the science of meteorology and the future improvement of the service as the service has already done during the past thirty-five years for the material interests of the United States. As this country led the world in the practical application of meteorology, it is desired hencefort to lead in the development of the science itself.

In addition to the observational side of the above-mentioned studies, it is absolutely necessary to provide conveniences for experimental work—that is to say, a physical laboratory in while to investigate all questions that yield to treatment by experiment, as distinct from pure stallation for the manufacture, by the electrolytic process, of the hydrogen gas for the use of balloons. This process has been demonstrated to be by far the most convenient and economical method of obtaining large quantities of pure hydrogen. It has been necessary to obtain the cooperation of the manufacture so findia rubber in order to secure a material that will retain its elasticity at the very low temperatures to

WORK OF THE YEAR, WITH RECOMMENDATIONS-THE MOUNT WEATHER

WORK OF THE YEAR, WITH RECOMMENDATIONS—THE MOUNT WEATHER RESEARCH OBSERVATORY.

Buildings completed and projected.—Work on both buildings and grounds at the Mount Weather Research Observatory, Virginia, has been pushed as vigorously as circumstances would permit. The administration building and weather station was completed and equipped last fall and observations begun, which have since been used daily by the forecasters at Washington. Two magnetic observatory buildings have been completed during the year, one for absolute and one for differential determinations of the elements of the earth's magnetism. The instruments for both magnetic observatories are now being installed. The Power house, which was completed during the last fiscal year, has been fitted with engines, generators, etc., for use in aerial work. All of the large machines were in place by the end of March, 1905, and work was then resumed on the revolving kite shelter, which was completed before the end of the fiscal year. Work was begun on the building for the physical laboratory in July. There are still some difficult questions regarding the best plans for the solar physics work, but as a final decision is not required at present, more time will be employed in consultation.

In planning the power house and kite shelter and in the installation of machinery in the first named, valuable aid has been rendered by Prof. Charles F. Marvin.

The schedule of apparatus for the solar physics observatory has been submitted to prominent instrument makers for estimates as to cost of construction.

The subject of solar radiation appears to be so important that early in the year the climatologist, Mr. H. H. Kimball, was instructed to prepare himself to take up this line of research at the Mount Weather Observatory. Through the courtesy of Secretary S. P. Langley, of the Final Proparatus even the study of solar radiation is taken up in earnest.

Observations with the Angström pyrheliometer and the Pickering polarimeter have been continued at Washington throughout Mount Weather in November, 1904, and have been continued uninterruptedly since that time.

Personnel of Mount Weather Observatory.—The research staff has been strengthened by the appointment of William J. Humphreys, Fh. D., Johns Hopkins University, and late professor of physics in the University of Virginla, to be supervising director at Mount Weather, to take effect July 1, 1905, and the recall of Mr. Louis G. Schultz from temporary detail in Argentina in connection with the equipment of magnetic observatories in that country.

It is a special and the recall of the United States Patent Office, has been appointed as a special ald to Professor Humphreys in studies of radiation, ionization, and solar physics.

The organization of the Mount Weather Observatory as at present constituted is as follows:

At Washington.—Director: The Chief of Bureau.

Board of advisers: Prof. Cleveland Abbe, Prof. Frank H. Bigelow, chairman; Prof. Henry J. Cox, Prof. Edward B. Garriott, Prof. Alfred J. Henry, Prof. Alexander G. McAdie, Prof. Charles F. Marvin, Prof. Illarry C. Frankendeld, and Prof. William J. Humphreys, who shall have supervision in detail of all work in the physical alboratory and solar physics observatory and general, rather than detailed, supervision of other researches. He will aid the research directors in matters wherein his knowledge may be of assistance, and will be an adviser rather than a director of their research, although in all matters of cooperation between research directors he will have the controlling voice. He will have charge of the discipline of the institution, referring to the Chief of Bureau such matters as can not be settled at the station which are also and the such parts of the professor Humphreys's principal aid in solar physics, and Mr. Herbert L. Solyom, who, by the kindness of Prof. E. B. Frost, is doing special work at the Yerkes Observations in atmospheric electricity and special work at the Yerkes Observations and the mean additional assistant.

proper subjects for investigation. The field of inquiry will therefore be a broad one.

PROBLEMS IN INSTRUMENTAL EQUIPMENT AWAITING SOLUTION.

For a number of years Prof. Charles F. Marvin, the official in charge of the instrument division, has endeavored to give a portion of his time and efforts to the study of problems which are directly related to the development of new apparatus and the perfection of the equipment now in use. Such efforts seemed to be indispensable, in order to keep pace with the demands for better instrumental devices. Thus far, however, while the value of such work has been conceded, it has had no recognized place or funds in the yearly schedule, and much of the little that has been done was accomplished only by effort during extra hours when the official in charge of the instrument division could be free from the constant interruption incident to the daily routine. During the last ten years the extension of the service with respect to the instrumental equipment of stations has been very great. In 1895 only about 361 automatic instruments of all kinds were in operation at stations. The number at the present time is 1,195.

Instrumental apparatus has been greatly improved and perfected; many new designs have been brought out and other scientific work accomplished, such, for example, as the partial determination of wha venocatants of the anemometer equation and the relation of wind vemperatures; studies upon the mechanics and equilibrium of kites, etc.

At no time in its past history has the Bureau assumed such an attitude toward the solution of the scientific problems of meteorology as at the present time. Extensive preparations are being made for a comprehensive study of difficult matters that may require years for their solution. At the same time many of the simpler but equally important problems are pressing for attention which it is hoped may be given in the near future.

Some of the investigations that can be taken up when the laboratories at Mount Weather are finished are as follows:

(5) Stations need apparatus for the more exact registration of the beginning and ending of precipitation. A device for this purpose has been partially worked out by Dr. Oliver L. Fassig, but important structural and mechanical improvements are required to render this device actually available for station use.

(6) Improvements are required in telethermographs. These instruments are needed at many stations.

(7) Itain gauges are needed suitable for exposure on mountain ridges remote from the habitation of the observer and in the watersheds of great rivers, so that the precipitation, snow or rain, for a whole season can be collected and measured, even though regular daily observations be not made.

(8) Apparatus intended for the recording of lightning has already received some attention, but we should be in a position to discuss the structural details of these devices and their merits and demerits on a basis of real experience.

(9) The new science of seismometry has revealed how widely sensitive the seemingly rigid earth really is to vibrations in its crust, and that all great earthquakes can be recorded over the entire globe by sufficiently sensitive instruments. On April 4, 1905, a great earthquake occurred in northwestern India, killing and injuring a great many people and causing the total destruction of towns and villages. The entire crust of the earth was set into elastic vibrations, which were recorded at the Weather Bureau and all over the world wherever delicate seismographs were maintained. Dr. F. Omori, secretary of the earthquake investigation committee of Japan, reports concerning the Indian earthquake that the large seismograph at Tokyo recorded first the waves proceeding from India to Tokyo direct, via Siberia, and by way of the Pacific Ocean. Still more remarkable than this, the seismogram at the Osaka Meteorological Observatory showed the waves which, crossing Europe and America, reached Japan by way of the Pacific Ocean, Still more remarkable than this, the seismogram at the Osaka Meteorologica

(11) Similar to the foregoing is the question of atmospheric humidity at temperatures above 100° F. The present humidity tables end at 140° F. Many inquiries are received for values at higher temperatures, such as are encountered in methods for artificial drying, etc.

The Bureau can render a distinct service to many interests by an accurate extension of the tables into the upper ranges of temperature.

There is a demand upon the Bureau for authoritative results in each of the several lines of inquiry cited, but progress on such original work has heretofore been impossible; now, however, with the completion of the physical laboratory at Mount Weather, which, it is expected, will be under roof before cold weather, and the installation of apparatus in this and other buildings at that place, these important problems may soon be attacked with hope of success in their solution.

MOUNT WEATHER RESEARCH OBSERVATORY.

Progress has been made in the establishment of the Mount Weather Research Observatory. A station of the first order has been maintained throughout the year for taking and telegraphing reports that are useful in making forecasts.

In the preparation for kite and balloon work, a number of important instruments have been installed and made ready for systematic work. Observations of the upper air are now being regularly taken in concert with similar aerial research institutions in foreign countries.

The interior finishings of the magnetic observatory buildings, the erection of the piers, and the installation of the magnetic instruments were completed during the year, and automatic and other records are now being continuously made.

MOUNT WEATHER RESEARCH OBSERVATORY.

The meteorological work of a first-order station has been maintained throughout the year, and telegraphic reports were transmitted to the central office in Washington daily at 8 a. m. and 8 p. m.

Work on the Physical Laboratory was resumed in July and satisfactory progress was made during the summer and fall of 1905. The building will probably be completed early in 1907.

In the preparation for kite and balloon work a number of important instruments have been installed and made ready for systematic work. Among these may be mentioned: (1) The electrolyzer, for the manufacture of the hydrogen gas employed in the kite balloon and the small rubber balloons; (2) the apparatus for the manufacture of liquid air, employed in testing thermometers at very low temperatures; (3) the apparatus used in testing the barometers, thermometers, and meteorographs employed in connection with the kites and balloons. A medium-sized power kite reel was installed in the revolving kite house early in the year, and experimental kiteflying was begun in September of 1905. During the year the stock of meteorographs, of kites, and of kite wire was materially increased; the instrumental equipment now includes eight different styles of kite—balloon meteorographs, comprising English, German, and French designs, in addition to the Marvin type heretofore used in the kite work of the Bureau, and the new Fergusson pattern used at the Blue Hill Observatory.

In April, 1906, systematic cooperation was begun in connection with the work of the International Commission of Aerial Research by flying kites on prearranged term days, and this work is being regularly maintained.

The Interior finishings of the magnetic observatory buildings, the

The interior finishings of the magnetic observatory buildings, the erection of the piers, and the installation of the magnetic instruments were completed during the year.

The instruments for absolute observations, except the declinometer and some auxiliary apparatus, were received and set up before January 1, 1906. The remaining absolute instruments were received and put in place by the end of May, and routine observations were established at the end of the fiscal year.

The Eschenhagen magnetographs were set up in the basement of the absolute observatory in December, 1905, and have given a satisfactory record of the magnetic elements since that time. The Wild magnetographs were received and installed by the first of June, and were being adjusted at the close of the fiscal year.

A gas plant for heating and illuminating the magnetic observatories was put in during the winter and has given satisfactory service since then.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 25483) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with

Mr. PENROSE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for the consideration of amendments, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Secretary will proceed to read

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, under the subhead "Office of the Postmaster-General," on page 3, line 11, before the word "in," to insert "including livery hire;" so as to make the clause read:

For livery hire incurred by inspectors not covered by their per diem allowance, including livery hire in connection with the installation and inspection of rural routes, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 4, to insert:

That hereafter the Postmaster-General may from time to time designate any employee in the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General above the grade of a clerk of Class E to sign warrants, collection and transfer drafts in his stead, and such warrants and drafts when so signed shall be of the same validity as if signed by the Postmaster-General.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the strike out:

That hereafter clerks in offices of the first and second class shall be divided into seven grades, as follows: First grade, salary $600; second grade, salary $700; third grade, salary $800; fourth grade, salary $900; fifth grade, salary $1,000; sixth grade, salary $1,100; seventh grade, salary $1,200. That clerks shall be promoted successively to the fourth grade in offices where the annual gross receipts shall be less than $50,000; and to the fifth grade in offices where the annual gross receipts shall be at least $50,000 and not in excess of $200,000; and to the sixth grade in offices where the annual gross receipts shall be in excess of $200,000: Provided, That the salary of clerks in second-class offices, except in localities where unusual conditions exist, shall not exceed $1,000.

That hereafter carriers in the city delivery service shall be divided into five grades, as follows: First grade, salary $600; second grade, salary $800; third grade, salary $900; fourth grade, salary $1,000; fifth grade, salary $1,100. That carriers shall be promoted successively to the third grade in offices where the annual gross receipts shall be less than $50,000; and to the fourth grade in offices where the annual gross receipts shall be at least $50,000 and not in excess of $200,000; and to the fifth grade in offices where the annual gross receipts shall be in excess of $200,000; Provided, That the compensation of a letter carrier shall not exceed $1,000 in offices where the annual gross receipts are less than $50,000; and shall not exceed $1,000 in offices where the annual gross receipts are less than $50,000; and shall not exceed $1,000 in offices where the annual gross receipts are in excess of $50,000 and not in excess of $200,000; and shall not exceed $1,000 in offices where the annual gross receipts are less than $50,000; and shall not exceed $1,000 in offices where the annual gross receipts are in excess of $50,000 and not in excess of $200,000; and shall not exceed $1,000 in offices where the annual gr receipts are in excess of $200,000: Provided further, That letter carriers and clerks employed in cities recognized by the Post-Office Department as now having a population in excess of 75,000, where the gross receipts of said offices at the time of the passage of this act are less than $200,000, shall be entitled to all the privileges and subject to all the requirements of this act applicable to post-offices whose gross receipts are in excess of $200,000.

And to insert the following:

That after June 30, 1907, clerks in offices of the first and second class and carriers in the city delivery service shall be divided into six grades, as follows: First grade, salary $600; second grade, salary $800; third grade, salary $900; fourth grade, salary $1,000; fifth grade, salary $1,100; sixth grade, salary $1,200. Clerks and carriers at first-class offices shall be promoted successively to the fifth grade, and clerks and carriers at second-class offices shall be promoted successively to the fourth grade.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope that amendment may be passed

I hope that amendment may be passed over for the present.

Mr. PENROSE. Let it be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over at the request of the Senator from North Dakota.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 14, to insert:

The annual gross receipts upon which the adjustment of the salaries of clerks and carriers for any fiscal year is based under the terms of this act shall be for the same period as the annual gross receipts on which the compensation of the postmaster is based.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 20, after the word "That," to strike out "hereafter" and insert "after June 30, 1907;" so as to read:

That after June 30, 1907, all promotions of both clerks and carriers shall be made at the beginning of the quarter following the expiration of a year's service in the next lower grade.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 17, after the word "That," to strike out "hereafter" and insert "after June 30, 1907;" and in line 21, after the word "grade," to insert "of salary;" so as to read:

That after June 30, 1907; any clerk shall be eligible for transfer to the service of a carrier, and any carrier shall be eligible for transfer to the service of a clerk, such transfer to be made to any grade not higher than the corresponding grade of salary, and the time which such clerk or carrier shall have served in the grade from which such transfer was made shall be counted in connection with the service to which such transfer may be made in computing the time of service necessary to entitle such employees to promotion.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 10, after the word "That," to strike out "hereafter" and insert "after June 30, 1907;" and in line 14, after the word "daily," to insert "and may serve as substitutes;" so as to read:

That after June 30, 1907, auxiliary employees may be employed, to be paid for actual service at the rate of 30 cents an hour: Provided, That such employees shall be required to work not less than two hours daily, and may serve as substitutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment passed over, beginning on page 5, will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The amendment passed over was, on page 5, after line 6, to strike out all down to and including line 2, on page 7, and to insert, on page 7, after line 2, the paragraph from line 3 to line 14, inclusive.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no objection to that amendment being now agreed to without making any remarks.

Mr. CARTER. The amendment has been read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment has been read.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. I have two or three amendments of a minor character which I wish to offer on behalf of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, altering the phraseology of the

II. I send the amendments to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 32, line 9, after the word "supplies," it is proposed to strike out the words "freight, drayage, and cartage charges;" so as to make the clause read:

Supplies for the rural-delivery service, including collection boxes, furniture, satchels, badges, straps, map supplies, repairing satchels and furniture, repairing, erecting, and painting collection boxes in the rural-delivery service, $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk, simply altering the phraseology of the bill. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 34, after line 22, it is proposed to

The VICE-PRESIDENT. As the proposed amendment is to an amendment already adopted, it will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the original amendment was adopted. In the absence of objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered and the amendment will be regarded as open to amendment. The amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] to the amendment will be retated.

The Secretary. On page 34, in line 23, it is proposed to strike out the following words in the amendment heretofore

That section 484, Revised Statutes of the United States, be amended by adding thereto the following:

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That section 3886, Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by chapter 2. United States Statutes at Large, volume 25, be amended by adding thereto the following:

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BURNHAM. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 33, line 6, to strike out the words inserted on the recommendation of the committee, "eight hundred and forty," and to insert "nine hundred."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator is to an amendment reported by the committee, which has been agreed to. It will therefore be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee was agreed to before the amendment of the Senator will be in

Mr. BURNHAM. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee amendment is now open to amendment, and the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Burnham] will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 33, line 6, it is proposed to strike out "eight hundred" and insert "nine hundred."

Mr. PENROSE. I accept the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. CLAY. What is the amendment, Mr. President?

Mr. PENROSE. It simply raises the compensation on a special rural carrier route in New Hampshire from $840 to $900

Mr. CLAY. One special route? Mr. PENROSE. There are six of them altogether in the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McENERY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted at the proper place in the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to insert:

That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized to create an additional division of the Rallway Mail Service, with head-quarters at New Orleans, La., and to assign to duty one division superintendent, in addition to those heretofore appointed, and who shall be paid a salary of $3,000 per annum; and one additional assistant division superintendent, at $1,800 per annum.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, that amendment was brought to the convenience of the con up in the committee, but the committee did not have time to fully investigate the merits of the proposition. I am willing to accept it for the present.

The amendment was agreed to.

Will the Senator from Pennsylvania tell me Mr. STONE. how much less the appropriation for this year is than it was last year for carrying the mails on railroads?

Mr. PENROSE. As I understand it, Mr. President, as near as an estimate can be made, the reduction made by this Congress in the compensation to railroads for the transportation of the mails is in the neighborhood of $4,000,000.

Mr. STONE. Is that appropriation made in a lump sum, or is it made so much for each line? How is it distributed?

Mr. PENROSE. The appropriation is made in accord with the estimates of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year for which this appropriation was intended. Congress can not distribute the several allotments among the railroads. The Department estimates and Congress appropriates

Mr. STONE. Perhaps it is my own fault, but I am not much wiser than I was before. I have asked the question because, in the last day or two, I have had a number of telegrams and communications of one kind and another from people living along the Wabash, in Missouri particularly, expressing great fear that a reduction in that pay would very much impair their mail service.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, Mr. President, there has been a great demand for a number of years for a reduction in the compensation of the railroads. Congress for the first time in a generation has made a substantial reduction.

Mr. STONE. Perhaps such a reduction ought to be made, but will the reduction be general?

Mr. PENROSE. It is absolutely horizontal, and in proportion, to every railroad in the country.

Mr. CLAY. I do not think there will be any reduction until there is a reweighing of the mails. My recollection is that the bill provides for a reweighing, and then for a reduction ranging from 5 to 10 per cent. I have the provision before me, which reads as follows:

The Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to readjust the compensation to be paid from and after the 1st day of July, 1907, for the transportation of mail on railroad routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of upward of 5,000 pounds by making the following changes in the present rates per mile per annum for the transportation of mail on such routes, and hereafter the rates on such routes shall be as follows: On routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mail per day of more than 5,000 pounds and less than 48,000 pounds the rate shall be 5 per cent less than the present rates on all weight carried in excess of 5,000 pounds; and on routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mail per day of more than 48,000 pounds the rate shall be 5 per cent less than the present rates on all weight carried in excess of 5,000 pounds up to 48,000 pounds, and for each additional 2,000 pounds in excess of 48,000 pounds at the rate of $19.24 upon all roads other than landgrant roads, and upon all land-grant roads the rate shall be $17.10 for each 2,000 pounds carried in excess of 5,000 pounds.

Mr. McCREARY. From what page is the Senator reading? Mr. CLAY. Page 22. I thought that the reduction was 5 per cent from 5,000 to 40,000 pounds, and 10 per cent from 40,000 to 80,000 pounds.

Mr. CARTER. The reduction is 5 per cent from 5,000 pounds to 48,000 pounds, and 10 per cent reduction on all over 48,000 pounds. It will be observed, if the tonnage basis is invoked, that after 48,000 pounds the tonnage payment is reduced the equivalent of 10 per cent.

Mr. STONE. What is about the average reduction?

Mr. CARTER. The average reduction is difficult to figure out at this time. There is no reduction under 5,000 pounds daily carried over a given mile. Between 5,000 pounds and 48,000 pounds the reduction is 5 per cent of the present railway pay. All over 48,000 pounds is computed upon a basis of tonnage. The present rate is twenty-one dollars and some cents per ton per mile; the rate allowed by the bill is $19 per ton, instead of $21.35; and on the land-grant railroads it is fixed by the bill at seventeen dollars and some odd cents per mile.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator if he has made any calculation as to about what the reduction will be?

Mr. CARTER. The reduction, according to the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, on the railway mail pay and railway post-office cars will run between four and five million dol-lars. There is some reduction, it will be perceived, on the railway post-office cars, which added to the reduction made on the tonnage percentage basis here employed, will aggregate $4,000,-000, and perchance more than that on the increased tonnage of the coming year.

Mr. McCREARY. May I ask the Senator a question? If the reduction is four millions, it would mean four millions less than the amount paid last year, would it not?

Mr. CARTER. The aggregate amount will probably be more than was paid out last year; but, if we made the payments upon the basis of last year, we would be paying out $4,000,000 for the current or coming year's service in excess of what we will pay under this bill.

Why was it necessary to make the change? Mr. McCREARY. Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the question of a change in the rates came up in the consideration of the charges for secondclass mail matter. The subject of the charge to the publisher and the price we paid for the service seemed so correlated that the one subject could not be very thoroughly considered without giving some consideration to the other.

The Commission, which made the recommendation upon which this reduction is based, carefully considered the testimony taken and the deductions drawn therefrom by what was known as the "Wolcott Commission," which investigated this question of railway-mail pay some years ago. In the first place, the Commission, or some members of it, thought a much greater reduction could be made than that which was finally determined upon. The reduction here recommended is clearly within the limits which Professor Adams—recognized as a very careful and accurate statistician-concluded would be entirely equitable and the reduction is made upon the theory that by virtue of the vast increase of the business of the railronds in carrying the mails, they will be as adequately compensated, with this reduction considered, as they were when in 1873 the present basis was determined upon. The basis was somewhat changed in 1876 and 1877.

At the time the present basis of payment was prescribed by law, the maximum tonnage per mile per year over any given road was about 16 tons. At the present time one road carries over 244 tons per mile per year over a given piece of track. The Commission concluded that some reduction ought to be made in view of the economy necessarily involved in the increase of tonnage; but in the consideration of the matter we found other factors of great importance.

The startling fact was disclosed that the average weight of the mail carried in a railway postal car is only about 2 tons, whereas from 20 to 30 tons of dead matter is carried along with the 2 or 2½ tons of mail. It is believed, however, that this reduction, notwithstanding that low tonnage, can be tolerated by the roads because of the possibility of using upon the main trunk lines storage cars to a greater extent than heretofore, so as to increase the amount of tons carried upon a given If the tonnage could be increased to 6 tons per car, the roads could carry the mail at even a lower rate than this bill contemplates; but under the present arrangement it is found difficult for the Post-Office Department to adequately load cars.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of line 17, page 24.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 24, line 17, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available after January 1, 1908, for any postal car that has not been equipped for electric lighting, and which shall not thereafter be lighted with electric light.

Mr. PENROSE. I shall have to raise the point of order that that is amenable to the rule, it being legislation not having been considered by a committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the point of order?
Mr. PENROSE. The point of order is that the amendment contains general legislation and is open to objection under the

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not believe that the proposed amendment will be found to be obnoxious to the rule upon a careful reading. It is simply a qualification or limitation of the appropriation.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the amendment is in the nature of general legislation, it has not been estimated for, and has not been considered by any standing or select committee of the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It does not require any estimate or any appropriation to meet it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I assume that the nature of the amendment shows how obnoxious it clearly is to the rule. The amendment provides, in short, that unless a given car is supplied after a specified date with electric lights it shall not be used to carry the mails, unless it becomes a gratuity.

I have no doubt of the desirability of requiring that all the railway post-office cars shall be provided with electrical appliances; but it is not clear that the appliances are used so generally upon the roads, or are likely to be used so generally upon the roads, as to make this a workable provision.

The Senator might suggest that, of course, on each car an installation could be be made, but the railroads are not compelled to carry the mails. They carry the mails under contract, and we might by virtue of an amendment of this kind drive the railway post-office cars off a certain line of railway, thus crippling the service in a given direction, and doing it very thoughtlessly. If it is possible to effectively require the lighting of cars with electricity, I understand that great bene-fit would follow in diminishing the chance of fire or destruction of the mails in case of disaster upon the line of road, and it would be infinitely better and more secure for the postal employees; but it is impracticable to tell here upon the floor whether the amendment fixing an arbitrary date upon which all cars not lighted by electricity shall cease to be used will not seriously cripple the service.

Hence it is, Mr. President, we see the wisdom of the rule which requires that matters shall be first considered by either a standing or select committee of this body. About the first thing a standing committee of the Senate would have done in connection with this amendment would have been to refer it to the proper officer of the Post-Office Department for the purpose of ascertaining whether conditions were such that the adoption of the amendment would seriously cripple the service, because, after all, the effectiveness and continuity of the service are matters of very clear and prime importance.

Mr. SPOONER. Has the amendment been referred to a com-

Mr. CARTER. It never has been referred to any committee and never has been considered by a committee, nor referred to any Department, nor is there any report upon it of any kind.

Mr. CARTER subsequently said: I rise to a question of personal privilege

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, during the debate on the post-office appropriation bill I stated that the amendment presented by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette], relating to the lighting of post-office cars by electricity, had not been sub-mitted to any committee, nor had it been reported upon by any Department of the Government. Since that statement was made I find that Senate resolution No. 79, embodying the proposition presented by the Senator from Wisconsin, was actually referred to the Post-Office Department, and upon that reference a report from the Postmaster-General was obtained.

I ask that the report of the Postmaster-General be incorporated in the RECORD, to the end that the statement made by me may be corrected and the views of the Post-Office Department set forth on that subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The report is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL, Washington, D. C., January 2, 1907.

Hon. Boies Penrose, BOIES L'ENROSE, Chairman Committee on Post-Offices and Post Roads, United States Senate.

Chairman Committee on Post-Offices and Post Roads,

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 14th ultimo, inclosing copy of S. R. No. 79, which authorizes and directs the Postmaster-General to require railroad companies carrying the United States mails, within one year from date of the approval of the resolution and thereafter, to furnish electrically lighted cars for the transportation of the United States mails, and in which railway postal clerks are employed and carried.

In reply to your request for my opinion regarding its merits, I have to say that while a great many of the railroads are experimenting with electricity as a method of lighting their best passenger cars, and the Department not only claims the authority under existing law to require the very best lighting for its mail cars in which clerks are employed, but will continue to exercise that authority to the extent of requiring post-office cars built in every particular according to specifications furnished by the Department to be lighted by electricity whenever it proves a reliable light, it must nevertheless be said that the lighting of passenger and mail cars by electricity has not reached that stage of perfection which makes it an adequate light under all conditions.

The mandatory requirement to furnish only electricity would be impracticable in the case of many railroads and unsatisfactory to the service in the case of many other roads.

The strongest and steadlest light that can be obtained is demanded for postal cars. Night work would be performer at great risk to the eye, and at the further risk of retarding the separation of mails, if no better light could be produced than that now furnished to passenger cars by some of the electric-light systems. The Department has for several years endeavored to follow closely all experimental tests of electric lighting for cars, with a view to requiring that form of lighting whenever and wherever it proves entirely satisfactory.

The Department realizes fully the exceptional

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that the amendment may again be

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available after January 1, 1908, for any postal car that has not been equipped for electric lighting, and which shall not thereafter be lighted with electric light.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it will be observed from a reading of the amendment that the Senator from Montana is mistaken about it. The amendment does not prohibit the use of any car not equipped for electric lighting. It simply withholds the appropriation from such cars as do not, after a stated time, use electricity for lighting purposes

Mr. CARTER. I will say to the Senator that I was not mistaken in that. I said that the amendment would, in effect, prohibit the use of such cars unless they were gratuitously used.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is not at all possible that the railroad companies would relinquish their fat pay for carrying the mail because they were required to equip their cars with elec-That they are enormously overpaid is well understood by everyone who has given any study whatever to this subject. It is true that the bill offered by the committee makes a small reduction in the extravagant pay which the railroads receive for carrying the mails. But the proposed cut is very small, indeed. There is no danger, Mr. President, that any company will take any of their cars out of service because required to incur the small expense incident to providing electric light for each mail car as required by the amendment which I have offered.

This amendment, sir, is a proposition that is not new. It has been considered by the committees which have had charge of this subject from time to time. At least I am certain that propositions of this sort have been introduced and referred to such committees. I know that a joint resolution was offered by myself early in the session and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I know that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of another coordinate branch of the legislative department has had under consideration a like

There is not a line of road in the United States where a month goes by that mail is not burned and sometimes life sacrificed because the cars are lighted with oil or some other like material rather than electricity.

The men in this service are hard worked and poorly paid. They are in positions of the greatest peril. The mail car is in the place of special danger in every train. This service, which must be very hazardous at best, is entitled to have every reasonable thing done for it which will in any degree reduce that hazard. The railway mail clerks ought not to have added to the chance of wrecking the awful peril of fire, which is almost certain to follow a wreck where the mail cars are lighted with oil lamps.

Mr. President, I am confident that the amendment is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. PENROSE. I confess that this appropriation bill reached the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads so late in the session that it was impossible to consider all the propositions before the committee. This was among those that the committee did not have time to sufficiently look into.

I withdraw my point of order and accept the amendment for the time being, and to give me an opportunity of conferring with the Department and ascertaining the practicability of carrying out this very excellent project within the time required by the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I take it for granted that when the chairman of the committee accepts the amendment it will be the duty of the conferees on the part of the Senate to insist in a reasonable way that it shall remain in the bill and become the law.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I can not doubt that good faith will be observed.

Mr. CLAY. Would it not be better to provide a longer time, giving the roads more time in which to equip the cars with electric lighting appliances? Can they do it within twelve months?

I doubt very materially if in twelve months it can be ac-Would it not be better to give a longer period complished. of time, say, two years, or even three years, for the purpose of completing it? I doubt very much whether all the roads carrying the mails can equip their cars in that length of time. The Senator may have investigated the subject and knows more than I do in regard to it. We ought to give at least a reasonable length of time, and I doubt if it can be done in twelve

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I agree with the Senator from Georgia that ample time should be given the railroad companies to equip their mail cars with electrical appliances and light them within a year. I believe that this can readily be done from such investigations as I have made, such expert knowledge as I have been able to get upon the subject. But if the Senator has information to the contrary and wishes to offer an amendment or suggestion respecting that, I shall be ready to con-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to. Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, a bill carrying $210,000,000 ought to be considered by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads more than one day before it is reported to the Senate. The Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads had this bill only one day, and had but about six hours to devote to it. It was not our fault. This bill ought to have been considered for a week or ten days by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. It reached the Senate only two or three days ago. Consequently the committee has not had the time necessary to carefully consider a measure carrying $210,000,000. It demonstrates that an appropriation bill of this magnitude ought to reach the Senate at least more than two or three or four days before the time for adjournment.

This measure was considered for a few hours. We could not help it. We did not have the time to devote to it, and the public interest demands that a measure of this kind shall be considered more than a few hours.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, it is not improper, I think, to add to what the Senator from Georgia has said that the report of the committee in favor of the bill has not yet been submitted to the Senate, or at least has not yet been printed, so that it can be examined.

Mr. PENROSE. As long as I have been on this committeenearly ten years-I have never known of a written report to accompany the bill.

As far as I am concerned as chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, the matter has not been hastily I have been for months in touch with the hearings considered. in the House and later on with the progress of the debate upon the bill in the House of Representatives. Few important alterations have been made by the Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I think the hundred thousand dollars for the site of the post-office in New York City, a unique proposition, in respect to which the committee was unanimous, a slight alteration in the schedule of increases relative to clerks and carriers, strongly recommended by the Department and already acted upon by the Senate when it passed the Crane bill, are about the only substantial alterations in the bill from the form in which it passed the House of Representatives. While the time has been short, and I regret that many of the appropriation bills, notably the river and harbor bill, came over so late to this body that it could not be considered in all the details that were perhaps desirable, I do not think that the very few alterations made in this bill would have required any extended deliberation by the Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The railroad pay has been cut down from an estimate of $47,660,000 to $44,660,000, a very slight increase over last year, owing to the enormous growth of the service and a practical reduction after an agitation of many years.

It is true, Mr. President, that only a very few Mr. CLAY. changes have been made in this bill. It is true, however, that the Senate committee has not had the time to consider the items passed by the House. I do not question what the chairman said, that he has given attention to this bill as it progressed in the House, but I simply desired to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the House has passed this bill only a few days before we are to adjourn, and that the members of the Senate committee has not had the time to consider the items that had passed the House.

Mr. PENROSE. I take a little pride, as chairman of the committee, in stating that there is not a personal claim or a provision of an individual character in this bill, such as frequently encumber appropriation bills. Every paragraph in it relates to current expenses in a great business Department of the Government. I do not recall a single item of appropriation in this bill that is above the estimate of the Department, and in a great majority of the cases there is a considerable reduction below the estimates of the Department. Whether anything would have been gained by spending several weeks in a tedious consideration of propositions purely routine in character, speaking for themselves upon the simplest inspection of the reports of the Department, I do not know.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what provision there is, if any, in the bill for the pneumatic-tube service?

Mr. PENROSE. The provisions concerning pneumatic-tube service are to defray the expenses of contracts already in existence and in course of execution.

Mr. FORAKER. Where can I find that provision? I do

Mr. FORAKER. Where can I find that provision? I do not find it at all. I beg the Senator's pardon, but I have been necessarily absent from the Chamber on other duty, and I am not familiar with the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senate committee made no alteration in the House provision, which is found on page 21, line 11:

For the transmission of mail by pneumatic tube or other similar devices, $1,250,000.

Mr. FORAKER. I offer an amendment to the bill, to be in-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. After the word "dollars," on page 21, line 13, strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following words:

And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to enter into contracts not exceeding in the aggregate $1,388,759 under the provisions of the law for a period not exceeding ten years: Provided, That said service shall not be extended in any cities other than those in which the service is now under contract under authority of Congress, except the borough of Brooklyn, the city of New York, and the cities of Baltimore, Md.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Kansas City, Mo.; Pittsburg, Pa., and San Francisco, Cal.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PENROSE. I was going to say to the Senator that I will accept his amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. That is entirely satisfactoy.

Mr. CLAY. I think we ought to have a vote on the amend-

Mr. CULBERSON. Is the amendment in order?

Mr. CLAY. I make the point of order that it is not in order, that it proposes general legislation. I think the Senator will find, if he will examine the report of the Postmaster-General, that he has said in his report to Congress that no bids have been received for this work, and he has made no recommendations

Mr. LODGE. On the point of order I think there can be no doubt that the amendment is in order because it is simply a repetition of existing law.

Mr. FORAKER. In exact language.

Mr. LODGE. In exact language.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Postmaster-General has received no bids and made no contracts, it is not our fault.

Mr. PENROSE. I ought to state that this matter was not very strongly pressed before the committee, and the committee was informed that the Post-Office Department had not been able to secure any bids in the cities referred to in the amendment, and that this paragraph, which was in the last appropriation act, had not been taken advantage of in those cities. The suffering does not appear to be acute in those communities, or there would doubtless have been a greater uprising in favor of

Mr. FORAKER. There is a good deal of uprising in these cities in favor of the amendment, but the gentlemen who seem to have a monopoly of putting in pneumatic-tube service do not seem to be ready yet to proceed at Cincinnati and these other cities; and if we can invest the Post-Office authorities with power to proceed in the matter if these gentlemen do not want to do it we will find somebody who will put in pneumatic-tube

Mr. CLAY. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Postmaster-General says he has been unable to receive any bids for this work, and he recommends that the Government put in the tubes and perform the work. The Postmaster-General deals with the question at length in his report, and contends that the Government ought to do the work, and intimates that it will be impossible to have it done otherwise.

Mr. FORAKER. That may prove to be the case, but I should like the Postmaster-General to be authorized again, as he was by the last legislation on the subject, and we can meet the proposition suggested by him later if that be necessary. If there is nobody willing to come forward and do the work, we will then probably ask the Government to do the work, but we want this pneumatic-tube service.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia insist upon his point of order?

Mr. CLAY. I desire to read what the Postmaster-General says about the merits of this proposition:

Preumatic-tube mail service has heretofore been in operation in the cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and St. Louis. The contracts in effect June 30, 1906, contemplated approximately 51 miles of double lines of tubes to be placed in operation, but on that date only about 28 miles of tube lines were in actual operation, at an annual rate of expenditure of $445,563.84.

The appropriation act for the current year authorized the extension of this class of service to the borough of Brooklyn and the cities of Baltimore, Cincinnati, Kansas City, Pittsburg, and San Francisco, and provided also that contracts could be made for a period not exceeding ten years (instead of four, as heretofore) and for an amount aggregating an annual rate of $1,250,000. On July 27, 1906, an advertisement was issued inviting proposals for the performance of this class of service in the cities where it has heretofore been performed, with some extensions, and also in the additional cities named. Proposals were received for service in Boston, Brooklyn, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and St. Louis. The aggregate of the bids received for these cities was greater than could be allowed, having in mind the service contemplated for those cities for which no bids were received and the limitation as to expenditure fixed by the appropriation act. Conferences were therefore had with the bidders, resulting in some reduction in the amounts of the proposals, and contracts were finally awarded for service as follows.

In my report of last year reference was made to the inauguration of pneumatic-tube service in 1893 and the subsequent extensions thereof; also to the work of an expert commission composed of business men and civil engineers of national reputation, appointed in 1900 by authority of Congress, which commission reached the conclusion that ultimately governmental control of pneumatic-tube systems for transmitting the mails would be found essential to a satisfactory administration, and I stated reasons which led me to make the recommendations that legislative authority be granted to make contracts for ten-year terms and that there be inserted in every future contract an option of purchase by the Government.

I do not care to consume the time of the Senate in further reading from the report, but you will find that the Postmaster-General is of opinion that the parties who desire the contract with the Government for the purpose of performing this work want at the hands of the Government an extravagant price. They are trying to hold up the Government, and the Postmaster-General has recommended that hereafter the Government undertake to perform this work. These new companies declined to bid in accordance with the terms fixed by the Government, and the Postmaster-General could not receive any bids for the work at the price fixed by the Government, which, in my opinion, was an extravagant price. And what was the result? These companies thought they could come to Congress and secure more money for this work, and the Postmaster-General undertook to meet them and to say, "If you do not accept the price fixed by Congress, the Government will undertake to do this service itself."

I do not hesitate to say that in my opinion we are paying more for the service than we ought to pay, and that under no circumstances ought Congress to increase the amount per mile. The Postmaster-General clearly intended to convey the idea that he desired the Congress to say that the Government should undertake the service. Probably he thought it would bring these parties to reasonable contracts.

Mr. President, if the companies have failed to comply with the law and send in bids which the Government could accept under the previous acts of Congress and we come forward again and appropriate, it is an encouragement to those parties to receive at the hands of the Government extraordinary prices for this work. I do not believe that the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator mean to say that the Postmaster-General intimates that the companies are trying to hold up the Government?

Mr. CLAY. I can not go that far. He does not say that in exact language. But the Postmaster-General had a commission examine the cost of this work, and he recommended that Congress allow so much money per mile. I believe it was $17,000 a mile. At the last session of Congress we appropriated so much money and provided for the extension of the service in the cities named. The Government advertised for bids, and no bids were received, and then the Postmaster-General comes back and recommends that the Government take under consideration the question of doing the work itself.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to inquire of him, as I am quite unfamiliar with the subject Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

order.

Mr. SPOONER. Are these pneumatic tubes protected by patents?

Mr. CLAY. I think some of them are and some are not, probably.

Mr. SPOONER. Might it not be a wise thing to put it in the alternative and allow the Postmaster-General to make contracts with these companies, or if he can not do it at a reasonable price, if the field is open that the Government should put

Mr. CLAY. That would be preferable beyond any question. Mr. FORAKER. I would have no objection to that, except only I would rather have the amendment stand in the form in which it is, because in this form it is not subject to a point of

It is a copy of the existing law? Mr. KEAN.

Mr. FORAKER. It is a copy of the existing law. If the Postmaster-General can not get bids we simply do not get our pneumatic service, and next year we will have to try again.

Mr. PENROSE. This identical provision was in the last bill. Mr. SPOONER. And it has been unproductive of results?

Mr. PENROSE. Unproductive of results.

Mr. SPOONER. Will it not go on being unproductive of results?

Mr. PENROSE. The committee did not desire to go on with unproductive results; but the Senator from Ohio desires to make another trial.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not want to try to incorporate in the bill an entirely new provision which might be subject to a point of order. Learning of the trouble only quite recently, having time to do nothing else really than what I have done, I thought would like to have the same provision repeated in the hope that the Postmaster-General may be successful in getting bids and starting this work. If at the end of the year nothing has been done, we certainly will try in some other way to get the benefit of this service.

Mr. SPOONER. I hardly think it would be subject to a point of order. We had some experience in regard to armor plate. The Government could not get bids at a reasonable price, and we provided in connection with an appropriation for armor plate, if acceptable bids were not made, for the construction of an armor-plate plant, and we received bids which were ac-ceptable. I would a great deal rather that private interests should do this business than have the Government undertake to

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know who does this business; I do not know anything about the people who are to put in the pneumatic-tube service; I never heard their names mentioned, but I have no objection to that kind of a provision being incorporated if the Senate will accept it. I only want to escape the dangers of a point of order; that is all.

Mr. SPOONER. I should think, if the proper sum was appropriated and there was connected with it the power in the Government itself to provide these facilities if they could not be procured otherwise, it would bring about the desired result, Mr. FORAKER. We would have to appropriate a sum that is not estimated for if we were to make two propositions.

Mr. SPOONER. It would be out of order, I suppose. Mr. FORAKER. I think it had better go this time I think it had better go this time as it is, and we shall do the best we can with it, and next year we will try to get it in a shape where it will work, if it does not work

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I am very much against this amendment, but after looking at the law providing for these contracts I am not prepared to say that the point of order could be sustained. I believe that the amendment ought to be defeated, to say the least of it. The amendment has never been referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. We have never had a minute to look into it. We might have called before us the Postmaster-General and asked him some questions relating to it if it had been referred to us.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia

Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.
Mr. FORAKER. It is my recollection that the Senate very carefully considered this matter a year ago; and it is my recollection that the Senator from Georgia aided us in arriving at a conclusion that was agreed to, as it was finally adopted.

Mr. CLAY. I think the Senator from Ohio is mistaken.

Mr. FORAKER. That is my recollection. I think the Senator at first was opposed to it, but finally agreed to the amendment in the form in which it was adopted and became a law.

All I ask is that we may repeat in this law what was placed in the law last year, but without any results.

Mr. CLAY. I will say to the Senator that we have allowed the Post-Office Department the exact dollars that the Department asked-

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President-

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. Fresident—
Mr. CLAY. On moment. We allowed the Post-Office Department every dollar that the Department asked for the purpose of putting in these tubes in the cities named. We allowed the Department $17,000 per mile; and the Department reports back that private parties will not do it for that amount and that that is a reasonable sum for such work.

Mr. FORAKER. Right there, what I wish to ask the Senator is, if it can not be done, what harm is done?

Mr. WARNER. You do not increase the appropriation? Mr. FORAKER. We do not increase the appropriation We do not increase the appropriation. do not cost anybody anything. It simply gives us an oppor-tunity to get during the coming year possibly what we thought we were securing last year.

Mr. CLAY. I have great doubts, I will say to the Senator, whether the pneumatic-tube service has been satisfactory in any instance. In fact I do not believe, from the report of the Postmaster-General, it has been satisfactory. To a large extent it has been a failure, and I judge, from reading the report of the Postmaster-General, that the time is not far distant when the entire service will be done away with. If you take the report of the Postmaster-General and read it, you will find that even in those cities that have the service it has not been satisfactory to the Government, and there has been no pressure upon the part of the Postmaster-General during the present session of Congress to insist upon a further extension of the service.

I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate further. Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I do not rise to this particular amendment, but merely to say, in addition to what the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Clay] said and what I said a moment ago about the lack of time for considering the bill, that the report of the committee in its favor has not yet been printed so that Senators can examine it.

In saying that there was no purpose on my part, of course, to criticise the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, or the committee of which I happen to be a member, but solely to emphasize a condition in the Senate which ought not to exist and for which the Senate itself is not responsible. The chairman of the committee [Mr. Penrose], however, suggested that it was not customary and it had not been the practice to make written reports to accompany this bill in the Senate. Not being able to attend the meeting of the committee for the few hours it considered the bill on account of another official engagement, I endeavored this morning to secure the report in its favor, to examine it with the limited time remaining for its consideration. I noticed on the Calendar of the Senate, on page 35, that there had been a report made in favor of the bill by the chairman of the committee, the report being numbered 7276. I have sent twice to-day to the document room for a copy of this report, and each time I have been informed that the report has not yet been received from the Public Printer. I take it from this publication in the Calendar that the report, in fact, has been made and that it has not yet been received from the Public Printer to be examined by the Senate. It is a matter, Mr. President, essential, it is true, to a consideration here, but I want it understood that I was not speaking idly when I said the report had been prepared and there had not yet been time for its printing and submission to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia insist upon his point of order?

Mr. CLAY. I do not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]. The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 22, line 13, after the word "dollars," insert:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended in payment for transportation of the mails by railroad routes where the average weight of mails per day has been computed by the use of a divisor less than the whole number of days such mails have been weighed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL BANK IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 6249) to provide for the establishment of an agricultural bank in the Philippine Islands.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been heretofore read and the amendments of the Committee on the Philippines agreed to. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. McCerary]. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lorge] has moved to lay the amendment upon the table, and the question is upon that mo-

Mr. McCREARY. As that amendment is the same as a bill which has passed the House, I think we should have a quorum present. I make the point that no quorum is present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allee	Dick	Lodge	Proctor
Ankeny	Elkins	Long	Rayner
	Flint
Bacon		McCreary	Scott
Berry	Foraker	McCumber	Simmons
Blackburn	Frazier	McEnery	Smith

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum being present, the question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask that the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read at the request of the Senator from Kentucky.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. 4. That on and after the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles coming into the United States from the Philippine Islands the rates of duty which are required to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported from foreign countries: Provided, That all articles wholly the growth and product of the Philippine Islands coming into the United States from the Philippine Islands shall hereafter be admitted free of duty, except sugar, tobacco, and rice, manufactured and unmanufactured, upon which there shall be levied, collected, and paid only 25 per cent of the rates of duty aforesaid: Provided further, That the rates of duty which are required hereby to be levied, collected, and paid upon products of the Philippine Islands coming into the United States shall be less any duty or taxes levied, collected, and paid thereon upon the shipment thereof from the Philippine Islands, as provided by law, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; but all articles wholly the growth and product of the Philippine Islands admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty under the provisions of this act, and coming directly from said islands to the United States for use and consumption therein, shall be hereafter exempt from any export duties imposed in the Philippine Islands; Provided, however, That in consideration of the rates of duty aforesaid, sugar and tobacco, both manufactured and unmanufactured wholly the growth and produce of the United States free of duty; Provided Author, That on and after the 11th day of April, 1909, all articles and merchandles going from the United States into the Philippine Islands, shall be admitted free of duty; Provided further, That on and after the 11th day of April, 1909, all articles and merchandles going from the United States into the Philippine Islands, shall be admitted free of duty; Provided further, That in addition to said duty when levied, and in case said articles are admitted into the United States free of further, the paid upon articles of merchandise of Philippine Islands manufacture coming into the United Sta States.

Sec. 5. That on and after the day when this act shall go into effect all goods, wares, and merchandise previously imported from the Philippine Islands, for which no entry has been made, and all goods, wares, and merchandise previously entered without payment of duty and under bond for warehousing, transportation, or any other purpose, for which no permit of delivery to the importer or his agent has been issued, shall be subjected to the duties imposed by law prior to the passage of this act, and to no other duty, upon the entry or the withdrawal thereof: Provided, That when duties are based upon the weight of merchandise deposited in any public or private bonded warehouse said duties shall be levied and collected upon the weight of such merchandise at the time of its entry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to lay on the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McCREARY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Daniel]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Foster]. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. Du Pont], and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Carmack], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New York [Mr. Platt], and vote. I vote "yea."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.
Mr. WARREN. I wish to announce that I have a general pair with that Senator, and I withhold my vote.
The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Martin]. I transfer that pair to the junior

Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN], and vote. I vote yea.'

I wish to announce that the Senator from Iowa Mr. HALE. [Mr. Allison] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. Elkins] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. Bailey].

Mr. KITTREDGE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Patterson]. I suggest to the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to transfer his pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLING-HAM] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON], so that we may both vote.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is entirely agreeable.

Mr. KITTREDGE. As the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DIL-LINGHAM] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] will stand paired on this question, I vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 11, as follows: YEAS-47.

So Mr. McCreary's amendment was laid on the table. Mr. CULBERSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

Mr. CULBERSON. Before that amendment is read, Mr. President, and especially before a motion to lay it on the table is made, I want to say to the Senate that there is no law now in the Philippine Islands reserving a homestead or any part of a homestead to the head of a family. There is no provision in this bill, which authorizes a corporation to loan money on land, for a homestead exemption from forced sale for debt, and the purpose of this amendment is to require such exemption in order that the homes of the people may not be taken for debt and to preserve them to the people of the country instead of their going into the hands of this corporation.

I ask that the amendment may now be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 2, after line 16, it is proposed to insert the following paragraph:

Fifth. Said act of the Philippine government shall contain an express provision exempting from forced sale for debt, except the purchase price or any part thereof, at least 2 acres of land used as a homestear by the owner, and the houses occupied thereon as homes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this amendment was considered in the committee, and it appeared to the committee so plain that if a limitation of this character were put on, which exists only in certain States of the Union, in view of the very small holdings there, it would be practically impossible for the very people to borrow money who it is desired shall obtain it, and that to make such an exemption would probably make it impossible for the small farmers in the Philippines to get the money with which this bank is designed to furnish them. I shall not say more than that, Mr. President, because the fate of this bill depends at this late stage of the session upon our dealing with it without much debate—in fact, with very little debate—and it has been debated before, but I hope this amendment will not be adopted, for I think it would probably ruin the purposes of the bill

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culber-

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CULBERSON. The last section, section 3 of the bill, provides-

That the bank shall not be permitted to hold real estate beyond that required for business premises: Provided, That the temporary acquisition of land as the result of foreclosure, or otherwise, on account of a debt, shall be permitted on condition that land so acquired shall be sold within a reasonable time from the date of acquisition.

It appears from this that there is no fixed time within which the land thus obtained by the corporation shall be alienated, nor, Mr. President, is there any penalty provided in the event the lands are not sold within the time supposed to be reasonable required by the act. I therefore move an amendment, which I send to the desk, which I shall myself take the liberty of reading. As I propose to amend section 3 it would read as

SEC. 3. That the bank shall not be permitted to hold real estate beyond that required for business premises: Provided, That the temporary acquisition of land as the result of foreclosure, or otherwise, on account of a debt, shall be permitted on condition that land so acquired shall be sold within ten years from the date of acquisition, and all said land not so allenated in good faith shall be forfeited to the Philippine government. government.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to that amendment. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 4, section 3, line 12, after the word "within," in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out the words "a reasonable time" and to insert "ten years;" and in line 13, after the word "acquisition," it is proposed to insert "and all said land not so alienated in good faith shall be forfeited to the Philippine government;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the bank shall not be permitted to hold real estate beyond that required for business premises: Provided, That the temporary acquisition of land as the result of foreclosure, or otherwise, on account of a debt, shall be permitted on condition that land so acquired shall be sold within ten years from the date of acquisition, and all said land not so alienated in good faith shall be foreited to the Philippine government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to come in as a new section, upon which, I take it, no discussion will be necessary

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add as a new section, to be known as "Section 4," the following:

Sec. 4. That nothing in this act shall be taken or construed to indicate any purpose on the part of the United States to exercise permanent sovereignty in the Philippine Islands. The United States hereby disclaim any disposition or intention to exercise permanent sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said islands, and assert their determination when a stable and independent government shall have been erected therein, entitled in the judgment of the Government of the United States to recognition as such, to transfer to said government, upon terms which shall be reasonable and just, all rights secured under the cession by Spain, and thereupon to leave the government and control of the islands to their people.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as a mere discussion of that amendment would open up such a wide debate as to be absolutely fatal to the bill, I move to lay it on the table.

Mr. CULBERSON. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I again announce my general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McCUMBER. Again transferring my pair to the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. Du Pont], I vote "yea."

Mr. LONG (after having voted in the affirmative). I wish to inquire if the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Dubois] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. LONG. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. Hemenway], and will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Under the arrangement suggested by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] I will vote. I vote "yea.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ELKINS. I have announced my pair with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. Bailey], but I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dolliver], and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BACON subsequently said: As I did not have the opportunity before the last vote was taken, I desire to say that I voted in the negative because of the guarantee of dividends in the bill. Otherwise I should have voted for it.

UNION STATION.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It has been my purpose to move the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9329) to amend an act approved February 28, 1903, entitled "An act to provide for a Union Station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," but the time is so short before the recess that I give notice that tomorrow morning, after the routine morning business, I will move the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KEAN. The Senator does not intend, of course, to interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In reply I will say to the Senator that it could not interfere with appropriation bills.

PENSIONS OF ARMY NURSES.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 695) increasing the pensions of Army

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SCOTT. I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That all nurses now on the pension roll, or who may hereafter be placed on said roll under existing law, and who are now or may hereafter be unable to earn a support, shall, upon making due proof of the fact, according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, be placed upon the pension roll and be entitled to receive pension as follows: In case such nurse has reached the age of 62 years, $12 per month; at the age of 70 years, $15 per month, and at the age of 75 years, $20 per month: Provided, That nurses 62 years of age or over, and who are now receiving pensions under existing laws, or whose claims are pending in the Bureau of Pensions, may, by application to the Commissioner of Pensions in such form as he may prescribe, receive the benefits of this act; and nothing herein contained shall prevent any nurse entitled to a pension from prosecuting her claim and receiving a pension under any other general or special act: Provided further, That no nurse shall receive a pension under any other law at the same time or for the same period that she is receiving a pension under the provisions of this act: And provided further, That no nurse who is now receiving or shall hereafter receive a greater pension under any other general or special law than she would be entitled to receive under the provisions herein shall be pensionable under this act.

Sec. 2. That no pension attorney, claim agent, or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services rendered in presenting any claim to the Bureau of Pensions or securing any pension under this act.

Sec. 3. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill increasing the pensions of nurses in certain cases,

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 25745) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report thereon. I wish to give notice that I shall try to get the bill up for consideration to-morrow morning

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the

ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION.

Mr. MILLARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8488) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans," approved June 28, 1902.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 7 of the act referred to so as to read as follows whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 7 of the act referred to so as to read as follows:

Sec. 7. That in order to facilitate the construction of the canal and works appurtenant thereto, as provided in this act, there is hereby created the Isthmian Canal Commission, to be composed of not more than seven members, in the discretion of the President, who shall be nominated and appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and whose tenure shall continue at the pleasure of the President. One of said Commissioners shall be designated as chairman of said Commission; and should the President deem it expedient and wise to appoint but one Commissioner under the terms of this act, he may do so; and in that event the said appointee shall be designated as Commissioner of the Isthmian Canal, who shall exercise all the powers by this act conferred upon the Isthmian Canal Commission, and who shall receive such compensation as the President may prescribe. The President may, through said office of Commission or Commissioner, employ in said service, at his discretion, engineers of the United States Army; and he may likewise employ engineers in civil life and other persons necessary for the proper and expeditious performance of said work, their compensation to be fixed by the President: Provided, That any army officer or other person receiving a given salary from the Government shall be required to relinquish such salary in lieu of compensation received for service under this act, but said Army officer or officers may retain their grade or grades in the Army. Said Commission or Commissioner shall in all matters be subject to the direction and control of the President, who shall require that regular and special reports be made to him and to Congress, and shall assign the necessary office rooms to said Commission or Commissioner and subordinate officers and provide them with all necessary equipment for the proper discharge of their duties.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. The bill which

Mr. TALIAFERRO. The bill which has just been read is an important one, and we are just on the eve of taking a recess when it is proposed to consider it. I should like to ask the Senator if he will not consent to its going over until to-morrow. or some later date?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 6 o'clock having arrived, the Senate will take a recess until 8.15 o'clock this evening.

Thereupon the Senate took a recess until 8.15 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

At the expiration of the recess the Senate reassembled.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION AND MILITARY RECORD BILLS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension bills on the Calendar and also unobjected bills to correct military records. I desire to state that we can get through with them in probably twenty minutes, and I had an understanding with the Senator who intended to move an executive session that I might go on with these bills.

Mr. CULLOM. I intended to move an executive session at this time, but I have no objection to twenty minutes being given to the Pension Calendar. I think the understanding was general that the session this evening was for executive business, to take up treaties.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator will note that very few are here at the present time, not even the Senator who moved that an evening session be held.

Mr. CULLOM. I will yield for pension bills, but for that purpose only.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will announce the first pension bill on the Calendar.

Mr. WARREN. I had not consented to that arrangement, I was on the floor. I merely wish to say that I have been waiting all day to get up a local bill, and I should be very glad to have it considered.

Mr. KEAN. Many of us have local bills.

Mr. LODGE. The notice was given for an executive session this evening.

Mr. CULLOM. That I have just stated.
Mr. LODGE. I told the Senator from North Dakota, who desires naturally to clear the Calendar of unobjected pension bills, which will take about fifteen minutes, that I would withhold the motion for an executive session for that purpose. I can not yield for anything else after the notice has been given, because if I yielded for one, I must yield for everyone, and we all have bills we would like to get through.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WARREN. Just a moment, please, on that matter. wish to call up a bill that will take only a minute. It is a measure entirely local and of benefit to the State I represent, and it is a Senate bill which must yet go to the House and be considered there. That is my only excuse for breaking in on this delightful symposium.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CULLOM. I rose before the Senator from Massachusetts came in and stated that my understanding was that this session was to be held for executive business; but if there was no definite understanding on that score, as far as I was concerned, I would yield to the Senator from North Dakota for twenty minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will announce the first pension bill on the Calendar.

AARON DAVIS.

The bill (H. R. 19589) granting a pension to Aaron Davis was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Aaron Davis, late of Company M, Fourth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per reports.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EMIL S. WEISSE.

The bill (H. R. 21910) granting a pension to Emil S. Weisse was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Emil S. Weisse, late of Company G, Second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM P. ROBBE.

The bill (H. R. 24220) granting an increase of pension to William P. Robbe was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Robbe, late of Company E, Forty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES H. SLOCUM.

The bill (H. R. 22763) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Slocum was considered as in Committee of the It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Charles H. Slocum, late of Company A, Thirty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, or-dered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MORTON A. PRATT.

The bill (H. R. 22785) granting an increase of pension to Morton A. Pratt was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Morton A. Pratt, late second and first lieutenant Company A, Third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This completes the Calendar of pension and military record bills.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, there are less than thirty unobjected bills on the Calendar. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of those unobjected bills. There will be plenty of time to-night to clear up all the bills represented by anyone in the Chamber at this time, instead of trying now and then to get up one or two, and some Senators getting none considered.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator withhold his motion, that I may report a bill from the Committee on Territories to go to the Calendar?

Mr. CLAPP. Very well; I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

MINING CLAIMS IN ALASKA.

Mr. BEVERIDGE, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8984) to amend the laws governing labor or improvements upon mining claims in Alaska, reported it with amendments.

CENTRAL COLORADO POWER COMPANY.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 24118) granting to the Central Colorado Power Company a right of way over certain public lands for irrigation and electric-power plants, in the State of Colorado, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate if there be no objection.

Mr. WHYTE. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

LANDS IN WYOMING.

Mr. WARREN. I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 8534) providing that the State of Wyoming be permitted to relinquish to the United States certain lands heretofore selected and to select other lands from the public domain in lieu thereof.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate if there be no objection.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that upon the delivery to the Secretary of the Interior by the State of Wyoming of its properly executed and duly recorded deed or deeds reconveying to the United States of America, in fee simple, certain lands heretofore selected by and certified to that State under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes," approved July 10, 1890, to wit, all those described in the bill, the State shall be authorized and permitted to select an equal number of acres from the unappropriated public lands of the United States in the State in the same manner, for the same purposes, and subject to the same conditions and limitations under which the lands so reconveyed were selected and held.

Section 2 provides that the lands so reconveyed shall be restored to and become a part of the public domain and be subject to disposal by the Government in the same manner in which other public lands of a like character are disposed of.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the Calendar.

Mr. KEAN. Pending that, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from New Jersey will withhold the motion for a few moments, I suggest that we ought to adopt this course in order to provide for the printing, so that we may not get in the knot we were in on the last day of the last session. We are asked to forward as many of these matters as we can early, and if we pass a few bills to-night it will help along the printing.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I insist on my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey moves that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes have it. The noes have it, and the Senate refuses to adjourn.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KEAN. Of course if I wanted—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. KEAN. I did not call for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays are demanded by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, I suggest that there is no quorum present.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator will not do that. Mr. McCREARY. It is now nearly midnight.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll. Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn,

The motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 26, 1907, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, February 25, 1907.

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Clerk read the following:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Washington, D. C., February 25, 1907.

I hereby designate Hon. WILLIAM A. Jones, of Virginia, as Speaker pro tempore during this day.

Mr. JONES of Virginia took the chair as Speaker pro tempore. The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who hast made us after Thine own image and filled our breasts with longings, hopes, and aspirations which are ever leading us onward and upward to larger life. We thank Thee for the pure, the noble, the true, who in their conduct strive continually to measure up to the standard of perfected manhood in Jesus Christ. We thank Thee for the ties of love and affection which bind us together, so that when one rejoices all rejoice, when one suffers all suffer with him, and when one is taken from our midst in death the heart is bowed in sorrow and we cherish the words he uttered, the things he did, above all the service he freely gave to his fellow-men.

"Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these

Bless, we beseech Thee, the service of the hour and help us to cherish in our hearts the memory of him for whom it is set apart, that we copy his virtues and live the larger life of which he was a conspicuous example in his home, in his community, and on the floor of this House, where he rendered faithful and efficient service for his country. Comfort his family, his friends and colleagues, and all who mourn his loss with the blessed assurance that though he may not return to us we shall go to him and dwell with him forever; and glory and honor and praise be Thine, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The Journal of the proceedings of Sunday, February 24, was read and approved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] will please take the chair.
Mr. MANN took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE HON. JOHN F. RIXEY.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the Hon. John F. Rixer, late a Member of this House from the State of Virginia, and in pursuance of the order heretofore made, the business of the House be now suspended to enable his associates to pay fitting tribute to his high character and distinguished services.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be, and he is hereby, instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, when, on Saturday, a fortnight ago, the announcement of the death of my late colleague, the Hon. John F. Rixey, was made in this House, it came with startling suddenness to most of us, for, although for many sad and dreary months he had been suffering from a deadly malady, few outside of his immediate family and closest friends realized that the grim destroyer had long since marked him for his own. There was little in his appearance and bearing, and far less in the lightsome and energetic manner in which he met and so faithfully discharged the manifold duties of his high position, betokening the dread disease which even then was steadily and surely doing its deadly work. With high courage, patriotic purpose, and a rare devotion to the interests of the constituency which had so long delighted to honor him, he positively refused to quit his post of duty upon this floor, although repeatedly and earnestly admonished by his physicians that to remain was to seriously endanger if not to sacrifice his life. Hence it was that many of his friends were shocked as well as grieved when it became known that almost immediately upon the adjournment of Congress he had gone away in quest of health; first, to the mountains of North Carolina; then, to Colorado, and, later still, to northern New York, in what proved a vain effort to stay the encroachments of a disease which has ever baffled the physicians' skill, and which no clime, warmed by the sun's bright circle, can surely and permanently eradicate. And so, despairing of recovery and resigned to a fate which he recognized to be inexorable, he quietly returned in the early winter season to the home in this city of his brother, Admiral Presley M. Rixey, the Surgeon-General of the Navy, there to await with submissive patience, sublime fortitude, and an inspiring Christian resignation the final summons to his eternal reward. It is not possible to recall without a feeling of sadness that since the beginning of the Fifty-ninth Congress "death's inexorable doom" has been pronounced against fifteen of our comrades, eleven of whom served in this House and four in the Senate Chamber; but never, I fain would believe, has the icy hand of the grim destroyer been laid upon a Member of this body who was more universally respected and esteemed and more generally beloved.

So to-day, amid the stern exactions of duty which invariably accompany and are inseparable from the closing hours of a session of Congress, we have suspended the work of legislation in order that opportunity may be given his colleagues to speak in words of praise and of eulogy of Mr. Rixey's accomplishments and character, and to extol those personal virtues which adorned his noble and gracious life.

JOHN FRANKLIN RIXEY was born at the "Retreat," the family homestead, in the county of Culpeper, near the town of Culpeper, on the 1st day of August, 1854. His father was Presley Rixey, a prominent farmer and extensive landowner. His mother's maiden name was Mary Francis Jones. Piedmont, Va., early became the storm center in the war between the States, and thus it was that the father, the better to provide for the protection and safety of his family, purchased a home in the town of Culpeper and removed them thither. It was there that most of the youth of JOHN F. RIXEY was passed, and there he received his early educational training in the famous Berkeley School. Afterwards he attended Bethel Academy, near Warrenton, Va., for several sessions, and in the summer of 1876 he was graduated from the law school of the University of Virginia with the degree of bachelor of laws. He at once began the practice of his profession at Culpeper, and two years thereafter was elected attorney for the Commonwealth for his county, a position the duties of which he continued to discharge with conspicuous fidelity for twelve consecutive years. In 1881 he married Ellen Barbour, the daughter of the late lieutenant-governor, James Barbour, and a niece of the late John S. Barbour, United States Senator from Virginia. Subsequently he went to reside at "Beauregard," near Brandy Station, the beautiful country seat which continued thereafter to be his permanent residence up to the time of his death. When, in 1896, after a spirited contest he received the Democratic nomination for Congress in the Eighth Congressional district, which was followed by a triumphant election, he had held no political office, and his personal acquaintance in some of the counties composing the district was quite limited. Subsequently each successive nomination came to him without opposition, and although away from the State during the whole of the campaign of last year, he was returned to the Sixtieth Congress with an overwhelming ma-Prior to his active entrance upon his Congressional duties in December, 1897, Mr. RIXEY assiduously practiced his profession in Culpeper and the adjacent counties of Fauquier, Rappahannock, Madison, Orange, and Louisa, and in the Federal courts and the supreme court of appeals of Virginia. Success seemed assured from the very beginning of his professional career. At first he practiced alone, but later became associated with his brother-in-law, the Hon. John S. Barbour, and it is believed that the firm of Rixey & Barbour enjoyed a practice among the most extensive and lucrative in the rural districts of

As a lawyer he was conspicuously successful, coming constantly in contact with many of the brightest luminaries in a judicial circuit widely famed for the ability and learning of its practitioners at the bar. Among the illustrious lawyers with whom he contested for primacy may be mentioned such eminent men as ex-Senator Eppa Hunton, Gen. William H. Payne, James V. Brooke, and John Murray Forbes, of Fauquier, Attorney-General James G. Field and Catlett Gibson, of Culpeper, and Governor James L. Kemper, of Madison, all of whom, save only the first, have now passed from the arena of life. That his forensic abilities and legal triumphs should have brought him into an enviable prominence amid such an imposing array of legal talent is the highest tribute which could be paid to his professional standing and reputation. He was a well-grounded, well-trained, and thoroughly equipped lawyer, and upon every proposition submitted to his judgment he brought to bear the well-disciplined force of a matured intelproposition submitted to his judgment His reasoning was forceful and logical, clear, strong, and convincing. As an advocate he achieved success through the compelling force of an inexorable logic rather than by the employment of the meretricious embellishments of speech and rhetorical display. He appealed to the reason rather than to the emotional sensibilities of judge and jury. That he was ever faithful to the noblest traditions of the profession which throughout his career he so conspicuously adorned, and the ethics of which he invariably observed, is the universal testimony of all those with whom he practiced.

But, descended as he was from a long line of practical planters, he inherited a passionate fondness for agriculture, which Washington, himself a practical agriculturist, declared to be the noblest calling of mankind. Living on a farm, to the direction of which he gave his close personal attention, he was what is known in Virginia as a country lawyer in contradistinction to the city attorney who has been aptly described as more technical and scientific though less philosophic, more astute, though less broad, than his country brother.

Mr. Rixey was in every high essential a typical farmer-lawyer. Nothing gave him more genuine pleasure than to ride or drive over his broad and fertile fields. Well do I recall with what delight he was wont to watch his herds of sleek, fat cattle as they roamed over the grass-clad hills and through the rich river bottoms of his two magnificent Culpeper County farms.

The late John Randolph Tucker, profound constitutional lawyer, brilliant orator, and great statesman though he was, possessed an intimate acquaintance with that character of lawyer whose life was spent amid rustic scenes and who breathed the pure atmosphere of an inspiring and ennobling pastoral life. Standing in this Hall he pronounced upon one of my predecessors a strikingly beautiful eulogy, in the course of which he declared:

I do not doubt that John Marshall, the most illustrious of the Chief Justices of the United States, under the classical shades of his country seat at Oak Hall, framed the inexorable logic of his argument in the case of Jonathan Robbins, and constructed those canons of interpretation in that series of marvelous judgments which laid the foundation of his fame as the greatest expounder of our Federal Constitution.

JOHN F. RIXEY was a farmer and stock raiser, as well as a lawyer, and in both capacities he was preeminently successful. Of his career in this House I shall say little, for the character and the quality of his work done here is known to us all. At all times active and vigilant in the performance of his legislative duties, he was justly regarded as an ideal Representative. and I venture nothing in saying that the district which honored him with six consecutive elections; and which in turn was by him so signally honored, never had a more efficient, more patriotic, more devoted, and more intelligent Representative. He met every duty and faced every obstacle fearlessly, and ever followed where conscience and judgment led. He had few, if any, enemies, for his directness, frankness, and singleness of purpose so exalted his deeds and gave weight to his words as to compel admiration of the man as the exponent of high civic virtue. His judgment was sound and his view of a situation broad, while he possessed in high degree the comparatively rare power of grasping details. He loved his country with genuine patriotism and served it with unselfish devotion. No man whom I have known during a somewhat extended service in the House of Representatives was ever more assiduously attentive to the public needs of his district or more considerate of the wishes and well-being of his constituents.

How natural, then, that he should have been by them so implicitly trusted, so highly esteemed, and so universally reloved! It was nothing less than his stern, inflexible, and unyielding sense of duty to country and obligation to constituents which held him to his post of duty in this Hall against the urgent solicitations of family and friends, and when every consideration of a purely personal character demanded he should lay down for the time being his public burdens and official cares. And now he has gone hence forevermore. To no mortal has it ever been given to solve the mysteries of life and death, and so to our blind vision and finite intelligences his untimely taking off may—nay, does—seem premature, but there is a solace in the thought that God knoweth when the appointed work is done; and so He giveth His beloved sleep.

off may—nay, does—seem premature, but there is a solace in the thought that God knoweth when the appointed work is done; and so He giveth His beloved sleep.

Surely he has not lived in vain whose life has furnished to the world such a splendid example of fidelity to conscience and devotion to duty. Reverencing always the things that are pure and noble and of good repute, ever exemplary in habit, conduct, and deportment, it was but natural that he should have publicly and openly professed his faith in Christ by connecting himself with one of His churches; and hence it was that some years prior to his death he became a member of the Presbyterian Church. His whole life was singularly beautiful and upright, his faith sublime, and his hope serene.

Of the mere personal attributes of his character and of my close personal and intimate relations to, and my warm and tender affection for, our dear friend I shall not trust myself further to speak, nor could I wish to intrude within the sacred precincts of his beautiful home life or lift the veil which hides the grief of the stricken wife and becayed children.

But recently I stood beside his open grave and with sorrowful heart and tearful eyes beheld the performance of the last sad rites over his funeral bier in a beautiful cemetery overlooking the town where had been spent the days of his early youth and maturer manbood.

As we contemplate, even faintly and imperfectly as mortals may, the immensity of the universe, the limitless reach and force of Almighty power, and the fathomless depth and graciousness of Almighty love, we may take leave of our friend in the fond hope and soothing faith that somewhere, sometime, the frail and transitory ties of mortal affection broken now may be welded for eternity; that he has but gone before, while we linger here a little longer.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I first knew John F. Rixey in 1879, when he was Commonwealth's attorney for his county, and thereafter until he and I came to this House was thrown with him frequently. As a lawyer Mr. Rixey ranked high at the Virginia bar, and for many years was one of the leading members of the bar in his and adjoining counties. He was especially strong as an advocate, besides being an adviser of sound judgment, possessing fully the confidence of his large clientage and his fellow-members of the bar. His relations with the bar were always pleasant, and while firm in advocating his own side of the case, he yet was ever ready to give to his adversary that courteous and considerate treatment which marks the able lawyer and gentleman.

His course in Congress has been a most successful one. He has represented his constituency with rare faithfulness and singleness of purpose. No man on this floor was ever more ready than he to respond to the many demands which are constantly made upon Members here. His public services, while not showy, were well recognized by his people and by those who served with him here. His death was most untimely. from a sphere of action in which his usefulness was conspicuous, cut off when his powers were ripest, those of us who survive him wonder at the inscrutable decrees of Providence.

Tho' much is taken, much abides.

While we deeply regret the loss of his presence, his usefulness in this place, his clear judgment, yet there remain to us the example of his clean life, his upright character, his forceful personality. He was indeed a modest gentleman, one of those spirits whose living made the world better, who in all of his life exemplified the true man, whose purposes were "to strive, to seek, to find, and not to yield" those great principles which elevate mankind and lead to a higher and better life.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, old Virginia, more frequently, perhaps, than any other part of the world, has produced a class of men who have displayed in private and in public life the best characteristics of the old English country gentleman com-bined with distinctive American traits—sturdiness, conservatism, common sense, and unobtrusive courage in conduct and opinion; acknowledging duty, as Washington and Lee did, to be not only "the noblest word in the English language," but the guiding star of their course in life; acknowledging consideration of the opinions and environment of others as the basis of all healthy and pleasant social relations; regarding the family as the keystone of the structure of human virtue, and looking upon the denial of law-conferred or law-permitted special privileges as the chief function of government, while leaving men otherwise free in their pursuits, industries, and development.

Such men are never sensationalists, though unwaveringly intolerant of private or public wrong. Such men attribute, as a habit of thought, honest motives to others; are in the habit of restraining and governing themselves, and believe therefore in the capacity and right of self-government as inherent in others; are sticklers for the limitation of the powers of political government so as to forestall and prevent the tyranny of ma-jorities and so as to secure the right of individual and local evolutionary progress in freedom, unrestrained except in so far as is necessary to prevent one man or one community or one nation from committing aggression on another. as in society, they are charitable in nonessentials, while inculcating essentials of character and outgrowing conduct more by example than by precept, leaving much to the child's enlightened sense of duty and individual development, not attempting to mold other human beings in their mold, believing that wife and child, like each of God's creatures, has a supreme right to live its own life in an atmosphere of guiding and guarding love.

Such men, being just and kind, firm of purpose and conduct as well as tolerant and considerate, moderate in all things, not extreme, self-restrained, not self-assertive, deserve and are sure to have loving and faithful wives, trustful and confiding children, loyal friends, willing servants, few enemies, and the sincere respect of all men. People attach themselves to them without analyzing the motives of their attachment and with or without intimacy of association. Men trust them; children love them; employees serve them "for more than the mere wages' sake." The whole structure of society can rest upon their strong shoulders as on a secure base.

Just such a man, to my personal knowledge, was John F. Rixey, if his character be limned by an analysist and not a eulogist, though in his case I am both. If all men were like him and his class, the dream of the theoretical anarchist might come true, because there would be little or no need of the physical force of political government. The individual life of each would, in combination, consummate the highest good of all. Justice, equality, and freedom—the sole objects of all right ing power and controlling force for good.

Mr. Speaker, words are poor things; like ourselves, a breath, and with a breath are gone. They can not restore the dead friend to a useful, noble, and unselfish life. They can not comfort the wife, who justly idolized him.

I wish to God they could.

They can not console the children, who will miss his love, example, and guidance. They can serve only to convey to those who loved him my abiding personal knowledge and appreciation of the courtesy, kindness, intelligence, moral courage, honesty, and public usefulness of the Virginia gentleman who has gone before us and yet has not ceased to be with us.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, "the joys of conquest are the joys of man.'

There could be no truer interpretation of universal life and compound of universal history than this aphorism of the poet.

Man reads it one way during life's stress and strain; another way at life's close. There are two arenas of conquest-the one, objective; the other, subjective. The one has ambition for its inspiration and guide; the other, wisdom. The one is the conquest of the world and all it implies; the other, the conquest The one passeth away and is forgotten as a dream; the other is indestructible.

One conquest is of the head; the other of the heart. And almost the last lesson most of us learn is that the heart is higher and nobler than the head; that the heart alone can really interpret life; that it alone can cherish its own intima-tions and soar with them to the heaven of their fulfillment.

We do not erect monuments in our hearts to those who are "great like Cæsar, stained with blood, but to those who were only great as they were good."

The world is expending treasure in disentombing the memorials of dead and buried empires and deciphering the hieroglyphics in which they are recorded, but the records of a good man's life are writ in letters so plain and imperishable that 'he who runs may read."

JOHN F. RIXEY was born in Culpeper County, Va., on August

 1, 1854, and reared in the country.
 The old Greeks, who seemed to know everything and to anticipate everything, called the earth our mother. Our brother, whose memory we are met to enshrine in our hearts, drank deep of the gentle and salutary monitions of nature. He loved to contemplate the symbolism of life in the shifting panaroma of the seasons, the unfolding of nascent manhood which had its type in the awakened vigor of spring, the stress of life as pictured by the heat and glare of the storms of summer, the fruits of a well-fought fight symbolized in the golden grain and fruitage of autumn, and the repose typified by the long nights and manteling snows of winter. As we read the short and simple annals of his life in the "Official Directory" we see how the love of country dominated him. He writes himself down as 'lawyer and farmer."

In due course he was sent to the common schools of his neighborhood, where he was subjected to their discipline and training, and then came the larger outlook and curriculum of Bethel Academy, and last, the strenuous and exigent labors of an academical and professional course at the University of

Thus equipped he entered the legal profession and began its practice in his native county. His industry, honesty, learning, and sound judgment soon brought him a lucrative practice, which he conducted actively until he was elected to Congress. During this period he was three times elected prosecuting attorney of Culpeper County, serving with distinguished ability in this responsible position for twelve years.

As a lawyer he ranked high among the people and bar of northern Virginia, a section which has ever been distinguished for its great lawyers. In 1896 he was elected to Congress, and such was the esteem entertained for him by the people of his district that he was reelected five times with practically no

In his political ideas and methods he has sometimes been called a partisan. If by this was meant that he sincerely and honestly believed in the principles and purposes of his party and tried by all honorable means to promote the public good by placing its men and measures in control of the Government, the accusation was true, and the term was simply a just tribute to a true and honest man.

It has been the partisan who in all ages of the world and every field of human progress has led the way. Wherever conflicts of opinion have determined the thoughts and actions of mankind, there the well-equipped partisan has been the guid-

During the time he was a Member of the House of Representatives Mr. Rixey stamped his views and personality upon some of the most important legislation enacted by the American Congress. For nearly nine years he was a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs and aided in some of the most radical and useful reforms in the history of the country, and was no less useful in calling attention to and preventing some of the worst abuses that threatened the nation.

Such, in brief outline, are the unadorned facts of the career of John F. Rixey. They illustrate a character rounded, integral and complete, and such a character always enlists our interests and challenges our analysis.

No man ever achieved what he achieved unless he had rich native endowments. You can not develop a negative nature. You can not train faculties which do not exist.

Shakespeare, in describing his hero Brutus, says:

His life was gentle; and the elements So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up, And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

And we all know that the fiber of gentleness always enters into the texture of ideal manhood.

Mr. Rixey was a modest, companionable, ingenious, friendly man.

No man can pass half a century of life, whose maturity is tested by the keen scrutiny of legal and parliamentary environments, and sustain that scrutiny unrebuked and unchallenged, who does not have the roots of his nature struck deep into the granite subsoil of conviction. Just as no oak can fling its branches broadcast to wrestle with the storms whose nutriment is not drawn from the limestone and iron of the earth.

Mr. Rixey was trained in the austere and inflexible doctrines of the Presbyterian Church. He sat under the ministry of a church whose clergy are compelled to sustain the rigid and protracted tests of both academic and theological institutes; a church which has never shrunk from facing the conception of truth whether that truth were pleasant or unpalatable. But the fabric of his faith was gentleness and brotherly kindness

When a man has attained to the possession of these attributes he has, indeed, experienced the highest "joys of conquest."

I have often read with pleasure this passage from Lord Bacon .

The poet saith excellently well: "It is a pleasure to stand upon the shore and to see ships tossed upon the sea; a pleasure to stand in the window of a castle and to see a battle and the adventures thereof below; but no pleasure is comparable to the standing upon the vantage ground of truth, where the air is always clear and serene, and to see the errors and wanderings and mists and tempests in the vale below. Certainly it is heaven upon earth to have a man's mind move in charity, rest in Providence, and turn upon the poles of truth."

And so we see how the life of John F. Rixey, turning upon these poles, made him true in all the relations of life. And we can safely leave him there.

May it be said of all of us, as we can say it of him:

He wore the white flower of a blameless life.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to add the simple tribute of a high regard and a warm personal friendship to the memory of the late Hon. John F. Rixey. If length of life under the guidance of Providence were always commensurate with one's virtues, he would have survived more than threescore years and ten. If life is to be measured by virtue, by the development of the lovable and noble qualities of heart and mind and by obedience to their suggestions, then his life was long and full, though his departure was in middle age, or manhood's prime, as we reckon our periods.

Entering Congress together ten years ago, for the last eight years serving together on the Committee on Naval Affairs of which he was a member before my assignment to it, sharing the same views upon nearly every question that has divided that committee, we became closely associated in our public service, more closely than I have been with any other Representative. Probably no Member had better opportunity of knowing his arduous work and patriotic zeal than myself. In my judgment, and I say it deliberately and after consideration, no man during my membership of this body has brought to the service of his country a more thorough patriotism, more unselfish loyalty to public interest, or a more incorruptible integrity, nor has anyone followed the path of duty as he saw it more unfalteringly and courageously than our deceased friend. He was a type of the splendid Representative; of strong heart, brave spirit, clear intellect; a man of conscience, courage, and ability; modest but alert, unassuming but energetic, tolerant but positive.

Ability is an essential of every great Representative, but integrity is the great essential of the best Representative. In this age of seductive allurements, under which men sometimes become negligent of public interests, and of strong temptations, under which they sometimes become unfaithful, a people should be regarded as happily performing their duty to themselves and the Republic in sending to a legislative body a Representative of both the capacity and the character of Mr. RIXEY. many years he held the commission of a great, proud, and intelligent constituency residing within the shadow of this Capitol, and as that commission fell from his hands on the 9th of February it was as unstained as the spotless snow that then enveloped his district.

There has been no session of recent Congresses when divisions have not appeared on this floor upon matters coming from the Naval Affairs Committee. These divisions have not been upon propositions vital to the Navy. It is both Democratic and Re-publican to have a strong Navy of the best men and best material, sufficient for the needs of our great country. Men in both parties have differed and will probably continue to differ as to the requisite magnitude of the Navy from time to time, depending largely upon each one's estimate of the probabilities of war and his confidence in our position and resources, all recognizing the necessity for the public of a proper Navy and the injustice upon the public of an unnecessarily large one. The divisions have been upon subsidiary matters, such as the number and kinds of new ships, how to obtain them, at what price, and how to obtain armor and armament, the establishment and improvement of navy-yards and stations, methods of economy and development, and other matters of secondary importance to the primary proposition of the creation and maintenance of a suffi-Though these subsidiary matters have sometimes cient Navy. involved political principles and aroused partisan discussion, yet, as a rule, the divisions upon matters from the Naval Committee have not been partisan. They have, however, produced much controversy and frequent debates. In these Mr. RIXEY was often a leading participant, and always proved himself well-equipped, accurate, ready, forceful, and entirely conversant with the subject at issue. He was an active, vigilant, vigorous, and candid antagonist, who never avoided the real point at stake and never struck below the belt.

His personal life was clean and his language pure. heard a profane or vulgar expression from his lips and never knew him to do an act his pastor would not have approved. Immorality and vice received no encouragement from his speech or conduct. By precept and example he contributed to the virtue and morality of every circle he entered. I never knew him until the maturity of his powers and character, but a knowledge of him then necessarily involves much insight into his earlier years. When one beholds a great oak he knows the rich ingredients that made it, in what soil the roots were nourished in its youth, what storms it has resisted, and what winters of adversity it has endured. From our deceased friend's strong, fixed character of manhood one can easily conceive the healthy environment of his boyhood, the various temptations that had in vain beat about his pathway, the steady application of his mind and heart to the duties of life, and the firm, fundamental, moral character that had controlled him in his constant progress in the esteem of his fellow-men.

I had the honor to be one of the committee of the House that attended the burial at Culpeper. In the funeral procession we observed that all of the business houses were closed out of respect for the occasion. A profound sorrow was over the little city. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, the snow covering the earth, a large concourse of his constituents, friends, and neighbors gathered in the cemetery to pay a last sad tribute to his mortal remains. The great outpouring of the people from far and near, who knew him well, bespoke the high esteem in which all classes held him. Among them he had lived without reproach. Before them he had established a right to the high title of a Christian gentleman, and those who assembled at his grave in loving remembrance of his life and character honored themselves in the service they rendered to his memory. And they seemed to realize, as we do, that his death is a loss to his State and to our common country.

Mr. Speaker, the kind expressions which we utter to-day in his memory are necessarily incomplete, for words are inadequate to express what the heart contains when we contemplate the death of such a man. In addition to the many pleasant recollections which I shall always cherish of him, I shall have the comforting thought that it is well with him. Knowing him as I did, I am glad to think that as the remorseless enemy approached he had no fear and his faith was strong, and when that enemy conquered his body and led his spirit to the dividing line, I doubt not that the "Friend that sticketh closer than a brother" was with him in the valley of the shadow and bestowed upon him the crown of immortality on the other side.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, as a surviving colleague of the late JOHN F. RIXEY, I desire, in a word, to indicate how tenderly I regard his memory. In my humble estimation no Representative in Congress better deserved, when he died, the kindly tributes to his personal worth which we are accustomed to pay here than the deceased Member from the Eighth Virginia district. Mr. Rixey was a man of solid character and superior intelligence. He had good preparation for the active pursuit of public affairs, which so soon engaged his attention, and his exceptional talents made it certain that his aspirations must enjoy a large measure of fulfillment. His early obligations as a trusted official of the State were discharged with such efficiency and fidelity as to merit the higher distinction that was bestowed upon him by his community when he was sent to be a Member of this House; and I am sure we will all agree that his service here, extending over a period of ten years, was characterized by a devotion and an industry that entitled him to the confidence and esteem with which his people so richly and so repeatedly honored him. His particular usefulness to his own district and his cheerful readiness to serve his own constituents quickly expanded into an ideal representative relation to his State and country, so that all Virginia mourns his death as a distinct bereavement of the Commonwealth, and the nation has cause to lament the loss of a diligent and patriotic servant.

Sprung from a good ancestry and reared in an atmosphere of refinement, nobody better understood, and no life was more surely conformed to, that philosophy which teaches that the well-being of the soul depends only on what we are and that nobleness of character is nothing else but the love of good and scorn of evil. Familiar with the niceties of social intercourse, and not insensible to the value of real tact, nevertheless the personal and official transactions of Mr. Rixey were distinguished by a frankness that knew no concealment and a courage that calculated not consequences. Though singularly unobtrusive by nature, he never evaded a duty nor sought to shift a responsibility. Tolerant of opposing opinions, he was firm and forceful in the assertions of his own convictions, and yielded only when it seemed best for his country that he should. His fine qualities of unselfishness and his complete zeal for the public interest as he conceived it were remarkably exhibited in his long service on the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House.

My intimacy with Mr. RIXEY did not extend to his fireside. That was my misfortune and no fault of his hospitality; but there is no need to draw aside the curtain and peer into the sanctity of the saddened home to tell that he was a devoted son, a gentle husband, an affectionate father, a loyal brother. He must have been these to have been so modest a gentleman, so true a friend, so brave a man, so patriotic a representative of his people.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to add my tribute to that of others on the life of our late colleague.

Singularly enough, while the naval appropriation bill was under consideration in the House, Mr. Rixey, who had always been a member of the committee during his Congressional service, died. He had always been one of the active members of the committee and had taken a great interest in naval affairs, both in the committee and in the debates on the floor of the House.

This is the first death that has occurred on the committee for some time, the last being that of the late Amos J. Cummings, five years ago. Mr. Rixey was a man who was intensely loyal to his constituents. He served them day and night, and the many large public improvements which he secured for his district are a testimonial of his indefatigable industry and loyalty to his constituents.

Mr. Rixey was a conservative man. He was not easily carried away by the whim or fancy of the hour. His whole nature was embedded in the solid rock of conservatism. He would oftentimes stand alone, unmoved by the persuasions of his colleagues and friends.

Above all, he was a man who had the courage of his convictions. If there is any one characteristic that has shone through his Congressional service here in this body it was that of his splendid courage. He not only dared to think for himself, but he dared to fight for what he believed to be right. Frequently upon this floor he led the charge against some provision in the naval bill which he did not feel that he could support, and whenever he led he led with all the splendid fire and determination of a general on the field of battle.

He was a man also of intense honesty of purpose and sincerity. He was one whom it took some time to thoroughly know. Though a man of pleasant demeanor and easy to approach, yet he was not a man who showed up his real worth on first acquaintance. He was frequently misunderstood, but upon intimate acquaintance he unfolded a wealth of sterling virtues which commanded the respect and admiration of all within the circle.

His death has been a great loss to this House. His Congressional service has been an honor to the State and the nation, and his memory will be cherished through the coming years.

Mr. McCall. Mr. Speaker, I feel it my duty to add one word expressing, I fear very inadequately, the high opinion that I had of our late colleague John F. Rixey. I am led to do this from my personal regard for him and from the relations of the States of Massachusetts and Virginia, and also from my association with Virginia Representatives upon this floor. These two noble Commonwealths have been associated together since before the foundation of this Government, and, with the exception of an unfortunate period which was necessary fully to establish our Government, they have emulated each other in everything that has contributed to our national glory. And I trust and believe they will continue to engage in that noble rivalry.

Then, I have been very closely associated with the Representatives of Virginia upon this floor. During my first ferm of service it was my privilege to be upon the Committee on Elections, of which that astute and able lawyer, that kindly gentleman, and that fair-minded man, Governor O'Farrell, was the chairman. Afterwards for many years I was associated in service upon the Committee on Ways and Means with the distinguished gentleman who is now governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia. And I am proud to say that I number among my friends many who have been or now are members of the able delegation from Virginia.

And so I feel that I should say one word here concerning that faithful and sterling Representative in whose memory this service is held. It adds something to our regard for representative government that a man like John F. Rixey should be sent here—a kindly man, an able man, a man who combined the energy and force of an intellectual fighter with the urbanity of a gentleman. It would be creditable to any constituency in this country that it should send such a man here. And so, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say simply that I had a very high regard for him personally. I have watched him upon this floor, I have marked the force with which he spoke, and I have noticed his modesty and lack of all obtrusiveness. But modest though he may have been, we had no difficulty in detecting in him the essence of true manhood and that living spark of which Wadsworth speaks when he says:

If thou indeed derive thy light from heaven,
Then, to the measure of that heaven-born light,
Shine, Poet, in thy place, and be content.
The stars preeminent in magnitude.
And they that from the zenith dart their beams (Visible though they be to half the earth, Though half a sphere be conscious of their brightness),
Are yet of no diviner origin,
No purer essence, than the one that burns,
Like an untended watch fire, on the ridge
Of some dark mountain; or than those which seem Humbly to hang, like twinkling winter lamps,
Among the branches of the leafless trees.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, when John Franklin Rixey died the Republic lost a faithful servant, Virginia lost one of her noblest citizens, all of us who were acquainted with him lost a true and reliable friend, and his family suffered a loss which words can not describe.

Since I have been a Member of this House death has been busy in the Virginia delegation. Out of it have died Barbour and Lee, Epes, Otey, Wise, and RIXEY—one from the Senate and five from the House:

Shortly after the termination of their membership in this body six others with whom I served passed over the Great Divide—Lawson, Edmonds, Meredith, Turner, Walker, and O'Ferrall. So in the period of a little less than eight Congresses twelve Members from Virginia have died, six of them out of active service in the Congress and six lately retired from it. I believe this mortality in the Congressional representation of the Old Dominion is perhaps unmatched in the history of the Government.

John F. Rixey was a man, as those of us who were acquainted with him well know, of the very highest type and of the noblest characteristics. He was modest, gentle, resolute, conscientious. He possessed the substantial abilities so necessary for a successful career here and elsewhere, and they were associated with a modesty truly charming and a courage entirely unobtrusive, but equal to the requirements of any occasion. He came of a fine line of ancestry, out of the citizenship of a fine old Commonwealth, where character and manhood, and the sturdy as well as the gentle virtues that characterize both, are estimated and appraised quite as highly, certainly, as anywhere else in the Union or in the world.

It seems to us, measuring human life as it is ordinarily measured, that he died prematurely because in his prime; but who knows when the right time to die has arrived or when it will arrive? Who knows whether it is not really better to fall in the prime and meridian of life, when those who esteem us remember us as we are at our best, than to fade and finally sink to rest in its evening, when the shadows are long drawn and when almost everything that makes life attractive and marks for us its achievements has long since ended? Old age often is weakness without its winsomeness; it is childhood without the charm of childhood. The memory dwells upon those who have departed as we knew them just before the end, the time of their departure. Mr. Rixey will rest in our memories and the memories of others. the memories of others who knew him as a man fully equipped and strong and ready for the battle of life; a man full of achievements in the contest. Perhaps, after all, when the shock is over and when grief has adjusted itself to the blow, and when time has effaced or dimmed the traces of the great sorrow that death always must bring-perhaps, after all, it is better that he shall abide in his colleagues' memories and in the memories of his own dearly loved ones as a man in his prime and in his glory, rather than as the fading, vanishing remnant of a life past its usefulness and its power and lingering only, waiting only, for the inevitable summons that comes in weakness and closes in the night when the stars have burned out, when nothing remains to illumine the sky with a suggestion of the halted power of manhood. The bright star that is blotted suddenly from the sky leaves in the memory of him who gazed upon it in its splendor a picture of a magnificent light, but the star that pales and pales and pales and finally flickers out can leave no memory so well worth cherishing.

Representative Rixey was an excellent type of what has been known and described as the "country lawyer." The country lawyer still exists and will exist in our land for many days, and, let us hope, many ages, but not so numerously in the comparison as in the former time.

In the early days of the Republic all our lawyers, with but few exceptions, were country lawyers; bred in the country, living in the country, identified with the country, following the pursuits of the countryman. We have arrived now at the stage of progress or development, or at least of advancing population, when, in large measure, professional men are gathered together The professional man of the city is essentially different from the professional-man of the country. familiar with books, he is farther along in scientific pursuits and developments, but he also is farther from nature. In a broad sense he knows less of men and their wants and rights and feelings and aspirations. The country lawyer, if he be a man of ability and of character—and if he be not he can not succeed-comes to live in close touch and in full understanding with the people among whom he dwells. Their wants are his wants; their aspirations are his aspirations; their triumphs are his triumphs; their sorrows and their struggles are his sorrows and his struggles; their life is his life. He communes with nature more and with books less. He learns more of general principles and less of special cases and special instances. He devotes himself more to broad thought and broad reasoning and broad philosophic principles, and less to what this man or that man, in this position or that position, here or there, now or at some other time, said upon some question. He does not look particularly for some case that is in point, but he digs deep for fundamental principles; he goes far into the philosophy of things and thence deduces his conclusions; and upon this foundation, out of the materials thus gathered, he rears his superstructure strong and symmetrical and, above all things else, natural. This man of whom I now speak dwelt in the country, and was of the country. A member of the learned profession and learned in it, he was a practical farmer, interested in all that concerns the people engaged in the tillage of the soil and in the care of their flocks and herds. He was, therefore, by natural development, a broad man in thought, purpose, and deed; a charitable man; in action a plain, practical man. He looked at things about him with the clear eye of experience. He read the book of nature as it was spread out before him, and there learned lessons far more valuable than man has traced in any book man has written or will ever write.

It seems strange, in this day of progress and advancement in science and in discovery, that there are still some diseases so formidable, so deadly, so all-pervading, so unconquerable that the strongest go down before them as readily as the weakest.

One of the most formidable of all diseases is the "white death," the plague of consumption, to which our friend fell a victim. In all the charities of philanthropy, in all the schemes of benevolent purposes, he will be among the greatest of benefactors who shall discover the cause of and the sure cure for this deadly disease, which strikes down manhood in its prime, which spares neither age nor youth, which devastates the earth, and marches unconquered through the ages. Let us hope that human science, and perseverance, and research may bring us something that will stay the ravages of this fell destroyer.

Never upon one of these occasions, or upon any occasion where we face death, can we rid ourselves-nor would we if we could-of the dreadful charm, of the fateful mystery, that ever hangs around human life. We come into the world without our own volition; we go out when, how, where, none—no more the wisest than the most foolish—can tell. We are here for a little while or for a comparatively long period, and yet how short is even the longest life when contrasted with the cycles of time and with the endless ages of eternal being! Life is a great mystery, a mystery all through, a mystery in every part—in its inception, in its progress, in its ending.

As we gaze into the grave where loved ones are laid, mind, spirit, imagination, hope fly far beyond the tomb, into pictured realms we know not where, by means we know not what. So it was when we laid our friend away to rest. So it was when we stood around his open grave in the snow-covered ground of the beautiful cemetery where he now reposes. So it is now, so it will be when we in our turn are laid away to rest in mother earth, and so it will be most assuredly until the career of humanity is ended and man no longer is a pilgrim going up and down over the surface of this planet. People reason about it, consult others about it, indulge in predictions about it, search Holy Writ concerning it. Yet all of it is mystery. Only the eye of faith can pierce the distant future. Only upon the wings of hope can we traverse the space which intervenes between this life and the life beyond. Every man's hope, every man's aspiration, every pulsation of the human heart tends to nourish a conviction that there must be a life beyond this, that this can not be the end of everything, that there must be another sphere of existence, sublimated out of the human, in which our being shall be endless, unclouded, unmarked by sorrow or care, where the sun shall eternally shine, where life shall have no end. In this faith we live through this earth life; to this we cling in our moments of darkness and when despair would settle upon us like a pall. Upon this we rest when threatened with earthly extinction. It is our hope, the star whose beams pierce through the clouds and fog and darkness when our loved ones go hence. Even if it could be demonstrated that this hope is without basis, that our aspirations have nothing upon which to rest, it would be cruelty to know the truth and to reveal it. We rest upon the faith, we dwell in the promise, and when this life is over, be the ending soon or be it remote, be it glorious or be it the re-verse, we all go down in the hope that there shall be an awak-ening beyond the tomb, and that the spirit which dominates and animates us here, which triumphs over flesh and over distance and circumstance, which soars upon its wings of faith and builds with its power of genius beyond the clouds, shall survive when the earthly tabernacle lies low in the dust from which it was originally created.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, for the fourth time in twice as many years the Virginia delegation in this House are called on to pay tribute to a departed colleague. Truly in the midst of life we are confronted by death. Death loves a shining mark, and in the demise of JOHN F. RIXEY it found one. An able and conscientious Representative, a loyal citizen of the Commonwealth of Virginia, a devoted husband, father, and brother has passed from earth to the spirit land.

It is no exaggeration to say that few Members of this House during the past decade commanded more respect and admiration than did our colleague, for he possessed qualities of head and heart that endeared him to all who were thrown with him

Had this blow fallen to one of the older Members of our delegation we would have said: "This is but nature's law; the machinery that sustains the mystery we call life has failed to perform its appointed task and the no less mystery of death is the natural consequence."

According to man's allotted time, years of great influence were before him; years in which to lay up knowledge and render service to those who loved, honored, and trusted him; years in which to study the science of government and apply its principles; years in which to study human nature and work out plans for the betterment of his fellows; yea, more, for him personally years in which to rear and direct the young and tender plants that gathered around his hearthstone; years of love and care for the one who brought life to his life and peace

Without the showy qualities of the orator, he possessed what we all know is more valuable in a Representative-sound judgment and patient attention to the details of the work. Through this he reached results here that fully met the demands of his constituents and would have insured him continued service as long as he desired to be a Representative in Congress.

The Commonwealth of Virginia can ill afford to lose, in the prime of life, such a man as was our deceased comrade. people outside of the Eighth district knew and appreciated him. In the city of Richmond several years ago he addressed a very cultivated audience, and as I passed through the crowd I heard men say: "That speech was worth listening to. Some day that man will be governor of the State."

I had a better opportunity, possibly, than any other of our delegation of judging as, to the estimate put upon him by the people of the Eighth district, for I canvassed several of his counties in 1898, and since that time have spoken frequently in various places in the district. I did not meet a man who spoke of him in any but the highest terms, and all seemed perfectly satisfied with the valuable service he gave them. If he had enemies-and who has served ten years in Congress without making some—I never met one. The opinion held of him in every county, so far as I have been able to learn, was strongly voiced in the Alexandria Sunday Times of yesterday a week After summing up the work done for that city, the writer said:

What he has done for this city and county he has done for every other county in his district, and has never failed to aid anything that tended to advance the interest of his mother State. Words are inadequate to do justice to this genial, high-toned, honorable Virginia gentleman, now laid beneath the soil of old Virginia, whom he loved so well and served so faithfully.

This would be a fitting epitaph on his tomb, where he sleeps beneath the sod of old Culpeper County, where his boyhood days were spent as he watched the surging tide of battle roll over the red hills and lovely plains of his native county. He was a lad of nine summers when as a man of 22 years of age I led a squadron of troop in a deadly fray through the streets of Culpeper. He grew to manhood amidst the struggles and trials of a people who lost all save their unquenchable spirit No wonder that he possessed his full and unstained honor. share of both and that they fed his young heart with noble resolves and fired his soul with a determination to fight life's battles as bravely as he had seen men face the mortal perils of the battlefield.

Our colleague and friend accomplished more in two decades than most men of equal, if not better opportunities, have done in twice that time. Witness an honorable and efficient service as Commonwealth's attorney of his county for twelve years. See and enjoy, as I have, the culture and refinement and comfort of one of the best-ordered and most-hospitable homes in all Virginia. Turn the pages of the Congressional Record and see his spirit, character, and manhood imprinted wherever duty impelled, or an entirely fitting and never a made opportunity presented itself.

If in a little over two decades he had accomplished this much, what might he not have achieved had robust health and long life been given unto him? We need not speculate. The end The shock was severe to most of us.

Of his faith I need not speak. I have reason to know that it was strong and abiding. It served him well when trials came. It accounts in part for his popularity in this House and else-It served him well when trials came. where. It had been growing with his years. The spirit speaks when the lips are closed. We can not conceal our inner life from others, try all we may. The laws of the spirit are as fixed as those of gravitation.

My personal relations with and my attachment for John F. RIXEY might be best told-if these need be told at all in this presence—by reference to my correspondence. Letters from my close friends and relatives, and even comparative strangers, were filled with words of condolence for me personally, and expressions of regret and sympathy at the loss I had sustained in the death of one of whom they had heard me speak so often and so highly.

I am comforted by the thought that these words of praise I here express, in one form or another I uttered of him while he lived. I shall love to recall his form and features, and during the active years that are left me I shall now and then visit the spot where we laid him to rest.

Peace to his memory. May a kind Providence guard and protect those who directly bind his memory to earth.

Mr. Speaker, I move that as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the House take a recess until 12 o'clock

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m.) the House was declared in recess.

The recess having expired, at 12 o'clock noon the House was called to order by the Speaker.

MARCUS WOOD.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return the bill (H. R. 21121) entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to Marcus Wood."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolu-

CHANGES OF STREET RAILWAY TRACKS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 6147) entitled "An act authorizing changes in certain street-railway tracks within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. The Chair notices the Senate provision after the enacting clause is stricken out and that there is a complete House substitute.

Then the motion of the gentleman, the Chair takes it, is to suspend the rules, agree to the House amendment, and pass the Senate bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. And to dispense with the reading of the Senate bill and ask for a conference and agree to the appointment of conferees without intervening motion?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir. Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, before raising a point of order I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether to-day, under the rules of the House, is suspension day, or whether the Chair recognizes this motion counting this day as one of the last six days of the session?

The SPEAKER. One of the last six days of the session.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I make this point, that the last day of the session is Monday next, that the Constitution of the United States does not recognize Sunday as a nonday to work in this House, that it is one of the six days that should be counted, and that, if you count Sunday, a motion to suspend the rules is not in order to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule on the point of order. Sunday is not taken into account in an adjournment for more than and less than three legislative days. There are many precedents of this kind. Sunday has always been recognized, in the absence of specific action by the House, as a dies

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will pardon me a moment, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the rule contemplates six actual days, and if I can have the attention of the Chair—

The SPEAKER. While the Chair is prepared to rule, and has ruled, out of courtesy to the gentleman the Chair will hear him very briefly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I only ask for two minutes. I wish to call the Speaker's attention to the fact that according to the order of this House next Sunday is recognized as a working day, because we have provided for the transaction of business on next Sunday, and that being the case, then it is necessary to count it.

The SPEAKER. What has the House provided for that day? Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that next Sunday is set apart for eulogies.

The SPEAKER.

The SPEAKER. No; the gentleman is under a mistake. Mr. UNDERWOOD. That was my impression. But I call the Speaker's attention to the fact that on every Sunday prior to the adjournment of Congress the House has been in session, and that next Sunday will be a working day along with the balance of the session.

The SPEAKER. And yet the Chair calls the attention of the gentleman to the fact that a Sunday's session is never held except by special order of the House. Adjournment on Saturday always carries until Monday; and when we adjourn three days at a time, under the constitutional provision, as we may, Sunday is never counted as one of the three days. The line of precedents is substantially practically unbroken that Sunday is considered as a dies non. The Chair has no hesitancy, under the rule and the practice of the House, in overruling the point of order.

The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to suspend the rules. agree to the amendment recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and pass the Senate bill, ask a conference, and direct the immediate appointment of the conferees. The Clerk will first report the substitute.

The Clerk proceeded to read the substitute.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. JAMES. I call for order.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. Mr. JAMES. I want to demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The bill will first be read, and then the question will be taken on ordering a second.

Mr. HEPBURN. A parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know what is the motion now before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again state the pending motion. It is a motion to suspend the rules, agree to the House amendment by way of substitute for the Senate bill, reading the substitute alone, then agree to the substitute amendment, and pass the Senate bill, ask a conference, and the appointment of the conferees at once without intervening motion.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for one or two minutes? I want to ask him a few questions.

The SPEAKER. Without unanimous consent, the motion is not debatable.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman yield to me five min-I want to make some inquiries of the gentleman utes of time? from Wisconsin.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that request.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to insist upon it for this reason: We have understood the gentleman from Wisconsin to say that there would be a bill presented to the House concerning these railways, in which there would be opportunity given for such amendments as would cure the bill somewhat—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York object?

Does the Chair understand the gentleman to object?

Mr. PAYNE. I do, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not clear.

Mr. PAYNE. I do at this time of the session. The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. JAMES. I demanded a second.

Mr. HEPBURN. I demand a second.
The SPEAKER. The substitute will first be read.

The substitute was read, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The substitute will first be read.

The substitute was read, as follows:

SEC. 13. That from and after the 1st day of January, 1908, every wagon or other vehicle of whatsoever kind or description weighing, when loaded, more than 2 tons exclusive of the weight of the vehicle, fused, operated, or propelled on, over, or across any of the streets, avenues, alleys, bridges, or roadways of the District of Columbia, shall have wheel thres not less than 4 inches broad. Any owner or driver or other person in control of such wagon or other vehicle so using, operating, or propelling the same who shall violate the provisions of this section, shall, on conviction thereof in the police court of the District of Columbia, be punished by a fine not exceeding $25, or by imprisonment for not more than sixty days, or both.

SEC. 14. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

SEC. 15. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? Mr. JAMES. I demand a second. Mr. SIMS. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee, a member of the committee, will be recognized as demanding a second.

Mr. JAMES. A parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JAMES. I would like to know if the gentleman is to be recognized on his side in favor of the bill?

The SPEAKER. Somebody will be recognized who is opposed to the bill. Is the gentleman from Tennessee opposed to the

Mr. SIMS. I would like to make the bill better, but as we can not do so I will take it as it is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky as demanding a second. Is the gentleman from Kentucky opposed to the bill?

Mr. JAMES. I am opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is opposed to the House amendment?

Mr. JAMES. I am.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. DABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask manimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. JAMES. Before that is done, I ask—
The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for twenty minutes and the gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for twenty minutes.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I will endeavor in as few words as possible to explain the provisions of this bill and what words as possible to explain the provisions of this bill and what it is. In the first place, on this map is shown the Union Station, and the dotted lines show the new construction that is necessary to bring all lines to that station. The yellow lines that are crossed here with a pen are to be taken out and abandoned. All of this loop here is on D street and puts this track in here [indicating], and puts the tracks in there in much better shape for the accommodation of the people than they are now. This is the most practical way to get to the station. It is the least construction that can be possibly figured out. Now, this bill also carries a piece of construction that can be possibly figured out. Now, this bill also carries a piece of construction that is demanded by the citizens, and has been urged for years in northeast Washington. It connects them with the Capital Traction system and brings them to the Union Station. This line of road commences here on Florida avenue, runs down Florida avenue to Eighth street east, and at Eighth and F streets makes direct connection with the depot.

This new construction runs by what is called Kendall Green, and is a very desirable piece of construction for that part of the city, furnishing, as it will, much needed additional facilities.

The committee has also added another provision to the bill, reenacting the smoke bill applying to locomotive engines that the House passed in the early part of this session; also a sec-tion reenacting what was known as the "wide-tire" provision, with a modification that does away with a large part of the opposition to it. The committee reported a bill to this House making the load that a wagon should carry with a tire less than 4 inches 5,000 pounds, including the wagon. That was amended in the House and made 4,000 pounds, including the wagon—too light a load, as in some cases these wagons weigh half, or perhaps more than half, of the 4,000 pounds. Now, the committee has taken this position, that it would make the load 2 tons, exclusive of the wagon, whether the wagon weighed 3,000 pounds or 2,000 pounds, and that would permit 2 tons of coal or any other material being delivered. In other words, this provision will not affect a wagon carrying 2 tons of coal. The object of the committee in trying to secure this legislation is to prevent these extremely heavy loads that cut up and destroy the streets, and especially the suburban macadam roads, which do not stand it nearly so well as the asphalt. The argument was made before the committee that there was no such provision in Chicago or St. Louis or Detroit; but I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that on practically all the House asphalt streets in those three cities there is no heavy hauling. These heavy loads are not permitted on the boulevards or that class of streets, but the Belgian-block pavement is used where the heavy hauling is done. This, I think, practically covers the bill—the entrance to the Union Station, the new construction in northeast Washington, the reenactment of the smoke law, and the wide-tire bill.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.
Mr. JONES of Virginia. What, if any, public demand is there for this wide-tire provision which the committee has placed upon this bill—a provision entirely wanting in germaneness so far as the bill itself is concerned?

Mr. BABCOCK. In answer to that I will say that in the first place it is in the interest of economy in caring for the streets of the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. My question is whether there is any public demand for it.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman is familiar with this subject and knows what the conditions are. We have just passed a bill for the resurfacing of Pennsylvania avenue over a very large portion of it. In answer to the question as to the public demand, I will say that representatives of citizens' associations, leading citizens, and practically everybody in the city of Washington is urging the passage of this proposition.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I understand that all the business interests of this city are united in opposition to it.

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, is it not rather unusual to bring into the House a number of very important measures of this sort in one bill and seek to pass them under suspension of the rules?

Mr. BABCOCK. The House has acted on the antismoke and on the wide-tire provision at this session of Congress, and those propositions are not new.

Mr. MANN. Are these two propositions in identically the same form as in the bills which passed the House?

Mr. BABCOCK. The wide-tire bill permits a heavier load. This bill in its present form permits a load of 2 tons excluding the wagon, while the other bill was 4,000 pounds including the wagon.

Mr. MANN. So that the gentleman has not followed the action of the House in that respect?

Mr. BABCOCK. Practically; yes.

This is more liberal. Mr. BEDE.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my time.

Mr. MANN. The bills are similar, with variations.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is an amendment in order to this bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not. No amendment is in order where motion has been made to suspend the rules.

Mr. JAMES. Two weeks ago, when the District Committee had up before the House a bill relative to the chartering of street railway lines, an amendment was offered providing for street railway fares of 3 cents. The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Babcock], stated to the House that when this bill came up giving these street railway lines the right to go into the Union Station that amendment would be germane, and that we would then have an opportunity to give to the people of this city that which they ought to have—a 3-cent street railway fare.

But we find that instead of that being the case that he comes in now and moves to suspend the rules, and no amendment of any character is in order. I want to appeal to this House to vote down this motion to suspend the rules and by this defeat this bill, and then make him bring it up in such a parliamentary situation as will make him keep faith with the House when he said an amendment would be in order. [Applause.] When the question was propounded to him, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Babcock] stated on last District day to the House as follows:

The gentleman is a member of the District Committee and is aware that what is known as the terminal bill is before that committee—

That is, the bill now under considerationwhich bill will be reported to this House and an amendment of this

That is, for the reduction in street railway car fare, making it 3 cents-will be germane to the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman permit? Mr. JAMES. Certainly. Mr. BABCOCK. I want to say to the gentleman and to the

Mr. JAMES. I do not want the gentleman to make a speech; I yielded for a question.

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, the gentleman will be fair. The statement of the gentleman from Kentucky is absolutely true. I did say that there would be a bill reported where amendments would be germane, and I made that statement in good faith; but when the time comes the gentleman must understand that the question of consuming so much time at this late hour of the session comes in.

Mr. JAMES. As a test of the gentleman's good faith, will he make a point of order against an amendment which I will offer for a 3-cent railroad fare?

Mr. BABCOCK. I will not.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman see that no objection of that sort is offered?

Mr. BABCOCK. Of course I could not guarantee that. Mr. JAMES. Then, Mr. Speaker, I offer the following Mr. JAMES. amendment-I ask unanimous consent for its considerationproviding for a 3-cent railway street car fare in the District of Columbia, and I send the amendment to the desk.

The SPEAKER. What is the request of the gentleman?

Mr. JAMES. I ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill shall cover the following amendment, which the Clerk will read. Is that the gentleman's request?
Mr. JAMES. That is the request.

The SPEAKER. This will proceed in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act the rate of fare that may be charged for the transportation of passengers over any and all street railway lines in the District of Columbia shall not exceed 3 cents, good for transportation for one passenger over the whole or any part of the line of such street railway company over which tickets are sold.

Mr. MANN. I object.
Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, we can get at this by defeating this bill. I had hoped that the gentleman from Illinois would not object, nor any other Member of the House, to an amendment of this sort. When we see a street-car company of this District, whose road did not cost exceeding $30,000 or $40,000 a mile, that is now declaring dividends at 6 per cent upon the capitalization of $600,000 a mile, I had hoped that no man representing the people would make an objection or a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me?
Mr. JAMES. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. Whatever may be my views upon that question,
I am opposed to considering the matter in this way, and I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. JAMES. I am glad to hear that the gentleman from Illinois is going to vote against the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield? I want to ask unanimous consent to include in the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill the following amendment, which send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the railway companies named herein shall grant free transfers at all points where the tracks of either company cross the tracks of the other; and each of said companies shall be required to accept such transfers.

Is there objection? The SPEAKER.

Mr. MANN. I object.
Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. JAMES. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend as follows, on page 7, after line 3:
"Provided, That said railway and all other surface railways in the District of Columbia shall sell two tickets for 5 cents, and said tickets shall be good on all of said lines of surface railways in said District of Columbia."

Mr. SULZER. Now, just a word. In my judgment these railways can well afford to sell two tickets for 5 cents, and they should be compelled to do so by law. Nine-tenths of the passengers do not ride a distance, on an average, of more than one-half mile, and the great railway companies of the country-the steam railroads-carry passengers for less than 3 cents a mile. If the water were taken out of the stock of these surface railways in the District of Columbia, they could carry passengers for 2 cents a ride and make a handsome profit and pay dividends on the actual value of the properties. I trust there will be no objection to my amendment and that it will be adopted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object. Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, some days since the Committee on the District of Columbia brought in a bill requiring 4inch tires in the District. That bill passed the House, did not meet with favor in the Senate, and the District Committee now has appended that bill as a provision upon the bill now before the House. What has taken place just a moment ago shows that we can not hope, by unanimous consent or otherwise, to amend this bill at all. Those of us, therefore, who are opposed to the broad-tire requirement will be forced to vote against the motion to suspend the rules and pass this bill. When the broad-When the broad-tire bill was before the House, I asked the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Barcock], the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, if it were not an admitted fact that the business interests of the farmers in Washington and the neighborhood were opposed to that bill. I understood him to reply that he had heard no protest.

I shall print as a part of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, a protest written to me in behalf of many of the business interests of the city, signed by Mr. H. J. Mooney. I shall also call the attention of the House to an article in the Evening Star giving the hearing before the Commissioners, prefacing it now by saying hearing before the Commissioners, prefacing it now by saying that that hearing is still going on, and that the District of Columbia Committee was not willing to wait until the Commissioners of the District of Columbia could report. At that hearing, Mr. Speaker, more than 100 men, representing the Carriage and Wagon Builders' Association, protested against the passage of the bill. The chief of the fire department of the city of Washington protested against it on behalf of his department, saying that it would cost the department some $35,781. and that the installation of the suggested broad tires would be an impediment rather than an aid to the department. William S. Knox, one of the expressmen of the city, said that he operates 150 wagons for his express business, and that more than 100 of them would have to be changed if the law was passed. Then he said that borrowing wagons from other cities would be prevented. Sometimes that company borrows wagons from Baltimore when there is a press of business here, and Baltimore borrows from Washington when conditions are re-That would be put an end to. Commissioner Biddle asked how it would do to make the limit 6,000 pounds, and Mr. Knox replied that it would not help a bit; that a set of 4-inch wheels for his wagons and to make all the necessary changes would cost him more than $10,000. Mr. Knox then submitted to the Commissioners a letter from the dealers in agricultural implements in the city of Washington in opposition to the proposed legislation. Then Mr. Conrad Syme, of counsel for the Business Men's Association of the city of Washington, protested against the passage of the bill. Mr. Syme concluded by reading letters from the Brennan Construction Company, and I call especial attention to this; and the Cranford Paving Company, which companies, it is said, do practically all the street paving for the District, in which they stated that the installation of broad tires would not tend to preserve the asphalt, and that they were opposed to the bill. The next speaker was Mr. Newbold, of the Merchants' Transfer Company, who protested. Then there came a protest from Robert Miller, of Spencerville, Md., speaking for the farmers of Montgomery County, who had held meetings and passed resolutions. Then Captain Oyster, of the Business Men's Association, protested in his own behalf and in that of the Business Men's Association. Then Mr. Bell, of the Jobbers and Shippers' Association, protested. Mr. D. S. Grove stated that he represented a firm which operates more than 300 wagons in the District, and he protested. Then Alexandria County, Va., speaking through Mr. Boteler, protested against it. Mr. W. A. Smoot and Mr. A. D. Brocket, of the against it. Mr. W. A. Smoot and Mr. A. D. Brocket, of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Alexandria, protested against it. Then Mr. J. T. Preston, of Alexandria City, protested, and said that one of these heavy broad-tired wagons could not get through the Virginia mud to the city of Washington at all if this bill was passed.

So much now in support of the assertion that I made the other day that every business interest of the city of Washington was opposed to the passage of that bill, which has now been grafted upon this bill in a most unusual and unprecedented way as one of its provisions. I desire to call special attention to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the men who have the contracts for laying this asphalt pavement say that the 4-inch-tire bill will do no good in preserving the asphalt, and it should be kept in mind that these men are under a contract, out of their own pockets and at their own expense, to keep the pavements of the city of Washington in repair for five years, so that they have every interest to see that the pavements are not injured. The following are, in full, the letter and the newspaper article to which I have called attention:

ing are, in full, the letter and the newspaper article to which I have called attention:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 20, 1907.

Hon. John Sharp Williams,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sin: Pursuant to your request of last evening, I am giving you, briefly, the sallent features of our opposition to the "rider" on the street railway bill known as the "Brond-tire bill," which requires that all woons in the District of Columbia weighing over 4,000 pounds when all woons in the District of Columbia weighing over 4,000 pounds when all woons in the District Commissioners, and without a respectful hearing before the House District Committee, although men interested in the same appeared before said committee, but were not allowed to state their case as fully as they desired. The bill has been misrepresented on the foor of the House by reason of the fact that the statement has been made that there was practically no opposition to the bill on the part of the business interests of the District, when the fact of the matter is that at the hearing before the Commissioners not one representative business man appeared in favor of the same. At that hearing all the business interests of the city were represented, and they were unanimous in their disapproval of the same. The Jobbers and Shippers' Association, board of trade, Business Men's Association, and, in fact, all business interests of the District spoke against said bill.

Chief Belt, of the Washington fire department, stated that it would cost $35,500 to make the changes in his department to conform to the law and that the danger of "skidding" or "sliding" would be increased to an alarming degree, which would mean, in his opinion, the overturning of the engines in going to fires, which he said was extremely dangerous to the men and horses, not to mention the damage to the trucks. The number of teams affected by this bill will eapproximately 5,000 and the estimated cost $1,000,000. This estimate does not take into consideration the loss to those affecte

OPPOSITION TO BROAD-TIRE BILL —HEARING TO-DAY BEFORE DISTRICT COM-MISSIONERS—NONE PRESENT FAVORED IT—BUSINESS MEN GIVE VIGOR-OUS EXPRESSION OF VIEWS—PROBABLE COST OF INNOVATION—MORE THAN FIVE THOUSAND VEHICLES WOULD BE AFFECTED, INCLUDING FIRE DEPARTMENT APPARATUS.

OUS EXPRESSION OF VIEWS—PROBABLE COST OF INNOVATION—MORE THAN FIVE THOUSAND VEHICLES WOULD BE AFFECTED, INCLUDING FIRE DEPARTMENT APPARATUS.

The "broad-tire" bill, which proposes to require every vehicle in the District weighing, with its load, 4,000 pounds or more, to have wheel three at least 4 inches in width, and which has been referred to the Commissioners by the District Committee of the Senard of Commissioners at the District building to-day. More than 100 men, representing the Carriage and Wagon Builders' Association, wagon owners, and other business and citizens' associations, were represented and offered objections to the proposed measure in most vigorous manner. That the requirements would inflict an undue hardship upon the merchants and business men of the District was the chief contention.

It was pointed out by several of those who addressed the Board that more than 5,000 vehicles would be affected and to change the tires would necessitate the placing of new axles at a large outlay of money. Chief Belt stated that practically every vehicle employed by the fire department would be affected by the proposed law. He stated that with few exceptions all of the fire vehicles weighed more than 4,000 pounds and that their tires are less than 4 inches in width. The new law would mean not only the extra expense of altering the tires and axles, but it would tend to make the vehicle heavier and retard its speed.

APPARATUS OF FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The chief stated that there are 62 pieces of apparatus in the fire department that would be affected and each is so constructed that none will sustain a 4-inch tire.

"As each piece," he explained, "carries 1 extra front wheel and 1 extra rear wheel, it will be seen that it will be necessary to purchase 6 wheels for each piece, making a total of 372 new wheels.

In answer to a question by Commissioner Macfarland, who presided at the hearing, Chief Belt said that the changes necessary should the bill be enacted would cost approximately $35,781.

"I think, gentlemen," Chi

1437 Pennsylvania avenue NW. He said that the bill was an unnecessary and unjust one, and that he hoped the Commissioners would report adversely upon it. Mr. Knox added that he operates 150 wagons for his express business and that more than 100 of them would be affected by the proposed law. He said the wagons generally weigh without a load from 3,000 to 3,500 pounds, and that the tires seldem ever measure more than 2½ or 3 inches. The law, it was pointed out, would prohibit the interchange of wagons between cities.

"Sometimes when we are rushed here we borrow wagons from Baltimore, and when the merchants of that city are busy they borrow from us," the speaker said. "This law would do away with this convenience."

NUMBER OF WAGONS AFFECTED.

Mr. Knox was unable to give the Commissioners an accurate idea of the number of wagons in the District that would be affected by the law, but said he imagined the total would be about 5,000. He then read prices showing what the changes would cost.

"How would it suit to make the limit 6,000 pounds?" Commissioner Biddle asked.

"It wouldn't help a bit, Mr. Knox answered. "The weight of the wagon due to the broadening of the tire and installation of heavier spokes and axles would necessitate us putting on four horses on all of our wagons affected. A set of 4-inch wheels for my wagons would cost $150, and to make all the necessary changes would cost me more than $10,000."

Mr. Kaox concluded his remarks by submitting to the Commissioners a letter from the dealers of agricultural implements of Washington in opposition to the proposed legislation.

"This bill, if enacted, will take from the pockets of the business men of Washington more than $2,000,000." Conrad Syme of counsel for the Business Men's Association declared. "Gentlemen, we want you to save us from this vicious legislation. It is just legislation like this gentlemen, that is driving our young business men out of the city. It is impossible to get a dollar invested in business interests in this city because of the extreme powers of Congress. The legislation is unwise, uncalled for, and unjust."

In answer to a question by Colonel Biddle, Mr. Syme said it would be useless to attempt to modify or amend the bill.

"The only thing we want," he added, "is that the bill be killed outright."

Mr. Syme concluded by reading letters from the Brennan Construc-

Mr. Syme concluded by reading letters from the Brennan Construction Company and the Cranford Paving Company, who, it is said, do practically all the street paving for the District, in which they stated that the installation of broad tires would not tend to preserve the asphalt, and that they opposed the bill.

OBJECTIONS OF MR. NEWBOLD.

objections of Mr. Newbold.

The next speaker was Mr. John L. Newbold, of the Merchants' Transfer Company. He was vigorous in his objections, and went into details in explaining to the Commissioners why the bill should be disapproved.

"The bill, if enacted, would put a number of business men out of business," Mr. Newbold declared. More than 5,000 wagons would be affected, and to make the necessary changes and alterations would cost the local wagon owners more than $1,000,000. There is no other city in the United States with such a regulation as this proposed one. It was proposed in Denver, but never became operative. "All laws in England regulating width of tires have been repealed, as have such laws of other European countries."

In answer to questions by Commissioner Macfarland, Mr. Newbold said comparatively light-framed wagons would be compelled to put on broad tires, because they often carry more than 4,000 pounds.

"How much would it cost to change each wagon, on an average," Commissioner Macfarland wanted to know.

"I will say about $400 or $500," Mr. Newbold answered.

At this point Chr. Heurich, of the brewing company of that name, said the requirements of the law would cost him more than $30,000. Mr. Macfarland announced that the Commissioners must have more definite figures and statistics on the question in order to properly report to Congress upon the bill.

"I would say offhand," Mr. Heurich remarked, "that it would cost me $300 a wagon to make the necessary changes because of this law, and I think that would be the average throughout the city."

SALES HAVE FALLEN OFF.

"Since this agitation over the broad tires was first brought up my sales have fallen off 50 per cent," said C. M. Wolf, a wagon dealer at 200 M street. "I represent a big wagon company, and I can safely say that very few 4-inch tires are being made, which shows that 4-inch tires are practically useless except in cases where extraordinary loads are to be carried."

In speaking for the farmers of Montgomery County, Robert Miller, of Spencerville, Md., said the farmers had adopted resolutions at their last meeting disapproving the bill. He remarked that his wagons, unloaded, weigh from 1,500 to 3,000 pounds.

Chairman Macfarland announced that the Commissioners were fortunate in having present the presidents of the three representative business and trade organizations of the District, and as they would voice the sentiments of hundreds of men who would be affected by the legislation anything which they might offer in the way of suggestions would be appreciated.

Gen. John M. Wilson, president of the board of trade, said his organization had taken no action in the matter, and as he simply attended the hearing as a citizen and a listener he had nothing to offer.

HARDSHIP UPON OWNERS.

Capt. James F. Oyster, president of the Business Men's Association, said he opposed the measure and that his association had passed resolutions opposing it also. He stated that there is no doubt that the requirements of the bill, if enacted, would inflict a hardship upon wagon owners in the District.

"I would approve the bill." Mr. Charles J. Bell, president of the Jobbers and Shippers' Association, said, "if the section relating to the wagons and tires was eliminated and a section inserted which would provide for the appropriating of a sufficient sum of money to extend the street paying of the city. There should be no legislation which would have a tendency to hurt the merchants and business men, and I trust you gentlemen will report adversely upon it."

Mr. Bell's remarks seemed to appeal to the sentiments of those present and called forth considerable applause.

D. S. Grove, the next speaker, stated that he represented a firm which operates more than 300 wagons in the District for hauling purposes and that every one of them would be affected by the "broad-tire" bill, and to make the necessary changes because of the provisions of the bill would cost nearly $10,000.

ALEXANDRIA COUNTY OPPOSED.

G. G. Boteler, of Alexandria County, was the next speaker. He said that for twenty-five years he had sold farm wagons in Virginia, and in that period he has not sold as many as five 4-inch-tire wagons and does not believe that in Alexandria and Fairfax counties there are ten 4-inch tires. The 4-inch tire is a theory, he asserted, and an impracticable proposition on ordinary roads. If the truckers and farmers of the section mentioned put on such tires, the speaker declared, they could not get to Washington with their produce, because of the extra weight.

W. A. Smoot and A. D. Brocket, of the Chamber of Commerce of Alexandria, Va., said that their organization is unanimously opposed to the bill for the reason that it would keep all heavy hauling teams from Alexandria out of the District and that such legislation would practically construct a Chinese wall around this city, to the exclusion of the traffic that comes from the adjacent counties in the form of truckage and country produce sold in the Washington markets.

ON VIRGINIA MUD ROADS.

J. T. Preston, of Alexandria, said that it had been demonstrated beyond any doubt that an ordinary country farm wagon with a 4-inch tire loaded to its capacity coming to Washington would never be able to make 1 mile's distance over a Virginia mud road in twenty-four hours with all the horses that could be hitched to it.

Others who addressed the Commissioners in opposition to the bill were W. S. Hoag, F. W. Bolgiano, E. P. Marsden, Charles Heitmuller, S. M. Frazier, E. P. Thomas, Warner Stutler, and T. L. Jackson.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn]. Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker,

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the House will not agree to the motion made by the gentleman from Wisconsin. Let me remind the House what the situation is that is now before the House. This is District day. This bill which the gentleman now moves to pass under suspension of the rules it is competent for him to bring to the attention of the House by virtue of the fact that this is District day. There must be some reason for this peculiar motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill. I think there is, and that is to cut off amendment, and the cutting off of amendment to this bill, I say, is not in the best of faith to this House. [Applause.] I know that time and again during this session gentlemen have wanted to add to certain bills reported from the Committee on the District various amendments, involving the subject of fares, involving the subject of transfers, the overloading of cars and insufficient facilities, the utter want of reports, intelligent, that can be understood, which should be made by these companies from time to time through the Congress. The gentleman has assured us on many occasions, Mr. Speaker, publicly and privately, that there would be a full opportunity in the House to offer and discuss these various questions, and-

Mr. BABCOCK. I will say I will not object to any amendment the gentleman wants to offer, and I do not think any member of the committee will.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then why is it that this bill, the only one that is brought in where these questions could be legitimately considered, the gentleman tries to crowd through under the pressure of a motion like this, this being the day that belongs exclusively to his committee, when he can have all the time that he wants?

Mr. BABCOCK. My answer to the gentleman's question is that it is on account of the short time of the session. I am willing to use the whole day if the organization will permit it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, this day belongs to the District of Columbia; it is their day, and there is no power that can take away their day

Mr. Speaker, I hope this motion will be voted down. new privileges to these street railway companies. There are some important streets in this city which it proposes to turn over to them. Mr. Speaker, there is one matter I want to call attention to. The companies say that they can not reduce their fares—that the roads are not now remunerative. It was developed the other day in the committee that one of these corporations was capitalized to the amount of $229,000 for each mile of single-track road. No wonder that they can not be made remunerative on such a fictitious and unwarrantable capitalization. Let me remind you, Mr. Speaker, that these men have bought those roads in many instances after comple-tion and operation. They were authorized under a separate charter. One corporation has gathered up thirteen, I think it is, of those roads. They may not be remunerative now, but they are holding them because of their speculative value and because of the certainty that in a short time they will be amply remunerative; and under the pretense of not being remunerative now they demand permission to continue their exactions and delinquencies. Look at the want of facilities the people suffer from and the manner in which some of the companies rob the people of this District of every vestige of comfort in the use of the roads. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. JAMES. I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin to consume some of his time.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat what I said in reference to the reason why this bill was called up under suspension of the rules. It was simply a question of time. did state on this floor last District day that this bill would be called up to-day, and that all amendments would be germane. I made that statement in good faith; but here we are confronted with the condition that this body has only six days left before adjournment, with important legislation pending, and upon consultation with the Speaker and Committee on Rules, the suggestion was made if I called up the bill it would militate against every other bill on the Calendar of the District of Columbia, because the whole day would doubtless be consumed in discussing it. I do not want to rest under the charge of being unfair and of attempting to mislead anyone—

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.
Mr. JAMES. How did you vote in the committee when an amendment was offered for the 3-cent fare?

The SPEAKER. Matters that took place in committee are not proper subject for debate.

Mr. JAMES. I thought perhaps the gentleman would let this House and country know-

Mr. BABCOCK. I would be very glad, Mr. Speaker, to answer the question.

The SPEAKER. Well, the rule is that what takes place in a committee of the House is not a proper subject for debate.

Mr. JAMES. I thought that point of order might perhaps be waived by the gentleman.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin permit me simply a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.
Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman, simply for information, what is that being given to the street railways by section 8 of this bill in the donation of so much of reservation 57 as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may, in their judgment, think necessary for sidewalks and roadways and for street railway use?

Mr. BABCOCK. It is a little piece taken off down here in this section [indicating on the map]-that little dotted line.

It is paid for by the railway company.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] desire to reserve the remainder of his time?

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD].

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say I am in favor of one of the provisions of this bill against which some argument has been made-that for providing for wide tires and I desire to read from the good-roads bulletin, issued by the Department of Agriculture, on that subject, as follows:

Department of Agriculture, on that subject, as follows:

Doubtless the best way to keep an earth road, or any road, for that matter, in repair is by the use of wide tires on all wagons carrying heavy burdens. Water and narrow tires aid each other in destroying streets, macadam, gravel, and earth roads. Narrow tires are also among the most destructive agents to the fields, pastures, and meadows of farms, while, on the other hand, wide tires are road makers; they roll and harden the surface, and every loaded wagon becomes in effect a road roller. Nothing so much tends to the improving of a road as the continued rolling of its surface.

Tests recently made at the experiment stations in Utah and Missouri show that wide tires not only improve the surface of roads, but that under ordinary circumstances less power is required to pull a wagon on which wide tires are used.

Mr. Speaker, while I favor that proposition, and while I favor

Mr. Speaker, while I favor that proposition, and while I favor some of the other propositions contained in this bill, I am opposed to its passage under the suspension of the rules; and I want to ask this House now if it does not make a mistake in upbraiding the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Babcock], the chairman of this committee, for refusing a vote. Mr. Speaker, every thoughtful man knows that the gentleman from Wisconsin is not responsible for it. The organization of this House is of that character that free discussion and free action in this body is not tolerated. If the gentleman from Wisconsin were dead and in heaven the organization of this House would still see to it that we could not have free action, free debate, and free consideration of questions.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood].

Mr. Underwood].

Mr. Underwood in the state of the general state of the gene House for years to come that is as important to the people of the District of Columbia as the bill we are now considering. This bill provides for the street cars connecting with the Union Depot. You never can get a bill through the two Houses of Congress to regulate these street-car systems unless you find the time when they will come here and ask Congress to do something. So if we ever expect to regulate these roads, prescribe a reasonable fare, and the other regulations that are necessary for the comfort of the people of this District, it is necessary to do so on this bill.

This bill also provides that there shall be no smoke in the District of Columbia, so far as the railroads coming into this District are concerned. It is an important question. I am informed that it will cost $5,000,000 to electrify these roads coming into the District. The railroads will not pay for it. They issue the bonds and the people who ride on the railroads and by additional freight rates will have to pay for the privilege of keeping things straight in order that the uptown dudes may walk around without smut on their collars. That is the main object in this question of the railroads not smoking. And yet these gentlemen bring this bill in here and propose to put that tax upon the people of the District, that much on the body politic here forever, without consideration and without opportunity to amend it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. One minute.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Members of this House that under the provisions of this bill they give the street-car companies one year and a half in which to construct these lines into this depot. Therefore there is no necessity for this bill to pass now. You can defeat this bill and you will force them to bring in a bill here that will give us the right to offer amendments that will give to the people of this District a 3-cent fare and will give to them a universal-transfer system, and that will give to the people of this District a chance to get out of the hands of these men that are robbing them daily, of a small amount, it is true, but the robbery mounts up into the millions when you put it altogether. [Applause.] They want under this bill to make the farmer have a broad tire, but not to make any less the street-car fare, and they want to make the engines quit smoking, but they are willing for the people to continue to smoke and be burned up by the extra charges of these street-car companies. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for eleven minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I hope to have the attention of the House and of every Member in it to what I expect to say now. I want first to address myself to the criticism made of the motion to pass this bill under suspension of the rules. There is not a Member of this House who wants to amend this bill more than I do in some respects. I have tried here, in season and out, before the committee and in hearings, to have a universal free-transfer proposition put in, but I have failed. The 3-cent fare proposition has been tried in the committee, and it has failed. Now, there is a measure in this bill which causes me to submit to this method. Why? Under compulsion, under restraint, because there is no other way to do it.

Congress in 1899, I believe it was, passed a smoke law that applies to every man, woman, and child and corporation in the District of Columbia, but specifically excepted the greatest smoke-making machine, the greatest smoke-nuisance producer known to man, and that was the railway engine.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; but my time is short.
Mr. SULLIVAN. Does the gentleman think the legislation is so important as to justify the committee in breaking faith with the House?

Mr. SIMS. Just wait until I get through, and then you can tell what I think about the matter.

Congress passed that bill, and the citizens of this District have had that law enforced against them. Thousands of dollars have been collected out of them by fines, while the great railways, sending 200 smoking engines through this District every day, have absolute immunity. I introduced a bill to simply apply the laws as they exist to these great smoke makers. It would have been reported, but for a certain occurrence I propose to mention. There was a bill to permit the terminal companies to acquire additional lands under condem terminal companies to acquire additional lands under condemnation proceedings, in order to make their terminals more I offered my bill in the committee as an amendment to that bill, and it was reported unanimously. While that bill was pending before the committee, as it was for a number of weeks, the railroads were heard to their satisfaction. They came before us from day to day and presented their arguments. I did not think they were good, and I do not now. I did not think they were good, and I do not now. That bill came into this House and passed without a single opposing vote. My friend who sees $5,000,000 cost to the railroad companies now, did not see it then. It went from the House by unanimous vote, in the sense that nobody opposed it or voted It went to the other body.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. SIMS. Yes, sir. Mr. JAMES. Do you think the smoke ordinance is of more benefit to the public than a measure to reduce the street-car fare to 3 cents?

I will cover the whole thing. Mr. SIMS.

Mr. JAMES. All right.

Mr. SIMS. In the other body it was reported unanimously. It was voted for in the Senate and passed, I might say, unanimously; but two hours afterwards a Senator asked that it be reconsidered, and it was. It went to the Calendar, and there it

We are now dealing with a bill in reference to the Union Station, to permit the street railways to construct their tracks and connect with it. This is germane to that subject, and we propose to apply the smoke law.

But I must not forget what I started to say about that other bill. The railroad companies ceased to press their proposition in the bill for condemnation and preferred to let it die rather than have the smoke law put upon them. Now that bill is practically dead. The measure went to the Calendar, and I predict it will die there.

Why should any man in this House, any Member in this House, be willing to apply a criminal law to the citizens of this District and then vote against applying the same criminal law to those who are more guilty than any other agency in the District?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Why should this not go to the Committee of the Whole? I would be very glad that the gentleman should have an opportunity to offer an amendment to this bill providing for universal transfers and am very anxious for my friend to offer his amendment and have a vote on it.

I never believed it was germane to the bill, nor is the 3-cent fare; and when we have every reason to believe beforehand that every one of these amendments will go out on a point of order, what good does it do to go into Committee of the Whole, simply when we know that every amendment offered must be defeated without a vote?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I have only a little time remaining. The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

The SPEAKER.
Mr. SULLIVAN. A single question.
Mr. SIMS. I will yield for a single question.
Mr. SIMS. I will yield for a single question.
Mr. SULLIVAN. Would it not be better for the committee to sit nights rather than persist in its course of breaking faith with the House?

Mr. SIMS. I will talk to you about that. That is what I am trying to arrive at.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I should like to hear you talk about it. Mr. SIMS. I have made no promise and I have broken no faith.

Mr. SULLIVAN. But the gentleman in charge of the bill has confessed that he did.

Mr. SIMS. He did give his opinion as to whether that amendment would be germane or not. The gentleman to-day says he will make no point of order, but when the gentleman from Alabama gets up and says, "I want to make a point of order to one provision of this bill," does not that put us on notice that the point of order is going to be made? Do I not know and does not the gentleman know that the point of order will be made?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I know it is better for this House to sit evenings and consider this bill properly, and I know they could do it if the committee would make an effort to do so.

Mr. SIMS. We do not pass a bill by going into Committee of the Whole and having it emasculated by points of order, even if we sit all night.

The House, in Committee of the Whole two or Mr. JAMES.

three weeks ago, voted for a 3-cent rate.

Mr. SIMS. Since it begins to look as though we were in earnest and not joking about this smoke proposition the railroads have become busy. They have been pouring their literature, their written arguments, into this House, and gentlemen are now interested who never showed any interest before. I have run up against these things before and got run over and know. what they mean. The corporations take no chances. give no privileges, but look at the privileges which they have received and the immunities which they have enjoyed. did Congress do? It paid these people, the railroads, by direct appropriation of money and land, about $5,000,000 to aid the Union Station project. What else? Congress relieved them of the perpetual maintenance of the highway bridge across the Potomac. What else? The Pennsylvania Railroad Company and those preceding it have been using public property of the United States on the Mall with a station that they have used now for more than thirty years and never have paid a cent for the privilege and never have paid even taxes. They have demonstrated their ability to control this House, and I fear they may do so again, and I want to see at least one restraint placed upon this corporate power. For my part, I was willing to forego the opportunity to offer an amendment. I was anxious to offer one, but I was willing to give up that opportunity in order to have this proposition placed in such a position here in the House that they can not defeat it on a point of order and without going on record.

You may call that bad faith if you want to. That is why I did it; that is why I agreed to it. I can not beat all the railroads, street and steam, and all the combined friends of the corporations when they are interested in one bill, but I did hope that we would be able to make them in this beautiful capital comply with this one regulation after all the privileges they have received here in occupying public property without ex-pense, a privilege worth millions to them, after they have received a direct appropriation of money and property, when the same company are building terminal facilities and tunnels in the city of New York and paying the city of New York for the privilege of doing so. I call on the gentleman from New York [Mr. Parsons] to bear me out. It cost them in the neighborhood of $100,000,000 to construct their improvements in and around the city of New York and pay for the use of its streets for a period-I do not know how long. They do not own Tammany Hall, they do not own the city government of New York. They walk up and pay the people there for these valuable fran-Chises; but they come here and snap their whip in the face of Congress, and gentlemen quake and shiver like a feather in a storm. Now, when I know that my friend from Kentucky [Mr. James] will not secure the adoption of his amendment, when I know I can not get the adoption of mine, why should I stand here and deprive myself and you of the chance of getting the only thing possible on this bill that there is any chance of getting passed?

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and agreeing to the amendment, passing the bill, asking a conference, and directing the immediate appointment of the con-

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that he was in doubt.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 86, nays 160, answered "present" 8, not voting 123, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. Gaines of Tennessee, and he answered "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with and that the statement be read in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the reading of the statement in lieu of the report?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 22580) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 12, 15, 17, 39, 47, 54, 55, 62, 63, 87, 88, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 124, 125, 126, 127, 171.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 13, 14, 16, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 38, 16, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 38, 41, 43, 46, 48, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 90, 91, 93, 94, 95, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 128, 129, 130, 131, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 148, 149, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, and agree to the

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment and insert:

That William Brown and Levi B. Gritts, on their own behalf and on behalf of all other Cherokee citizens, having like interests in the property allotted under the act of July 1, 1902, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands of the Cherokee Nation, for the disposition of town sites therein, and for other purposes," and David Muskrat and J. Henry Dick, on their behalf and on behalf of all Cherokee citizens enrolled as such for allotment as of September 1, 1902, be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to institute their suits in the Court of Claims to determine the validity of any acts of Congress passed since the said act of July 1, 1902, in so far as said acts, or any of them, attempt to increase or extend the restrictions upon alienation, incumbrance, or the right to lease the allotments of lands of Cherokee citizens, or to increase the number of persons entitled to share in the final distribution of lands and funds of the Cherokees beyond those enrolled for allotment as of September 1, 1902, and provided for in the said act of July 1, 1902.

And the Senate agree to the same.

MOSES E. CLAPP, P. J. McCumber, Fred T. Dubois, Managers on the part of the Senate. J. S. SHERMAN, JOHN F. LACEY, JOHN H. STEPHENS, Managers on the part of the House.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The Senate receded from amendments Nos. 2, 12, 15, 17, 39, 47, 54, 55, 62, 63, 87, 88, 92, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 124, 125, 126, 127, and 171, leaving the bill in respect to these various matters in precisely the condition it was when it left the House.

The House receded with amendments from amendments Nos. 10, 12, 28, 37, 40, 42, 44, 45, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 89, 96, 132, 139, 147, 150, 170, 178, and 187, and to all other amendments the House receded.

Amendment No. 1 makes it possible for the Department in conducting irrigation work to employ Indians and Indian teams without the formality of the contract which is made with white citizens. It is not easy for Indians to understand the terms of a written contract and the furnishing of a bond, etc. The Indian labor is not considered as in competition with the white, but their employment is used as in part a means of supporting them and bettering their condition, and this amendment makes it possible so to do.

Amendment No. 3 provides that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may use Indian funds in the Treasury (so-called "trust funds") for the payment of taxes upon the property of Indians where the taxes have not been paid by the Indians themselves.

Amendment No. 4 increases from $25,000 to $40,000 the fund appropriated for the survey and subdivision of Indian reservations, and amendment No. 5 makes immediately available $15,000 out of this $40,000 for use during the present fiscal year.

Amendment No. 6 extends to special agents of the Indian Bureau the statutory rights conferred upon Indian agents and other officers for the suppression of the liquor traffic.

Amendment No. 7 strikes from the bill the provision inserted by the House that Indian pupils might be farmed out to whites "under arrangements in which their proper care, support, and education shall be in exchange for labor," making it possible to hereafter arrange for their farming out for some compensation other than their temporary support.

Amendment No. 8 increases from $70,000 to $75,000 the amount appropriated for the collection and transportation of pupils, etc.

Amendment No. 9 provides that white children may hereafter be received in Indian schools upon payment of the tuition therefor, the tuition fees thus received to be turned over to the Treasury to reimburse the fund for the support of schools.

By amendment No. 10 the Senate strikes from the bill the provision that clerks in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, detailed for special duty in the field, might receive an extra compensation not exceeding $3 per day, and inserted in lieu thereof a provision that such clerks while performing such duty shall receive $3 per day for subsistence other than transportation and sleeping-car fare.

Amendment No. 11, which has been stricken from the bill, was a provision which classified the specially appropriated-for schools into five classes and provided that the salaries of the superintendents thereof should be fixed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, not to exceed a maximum named therein for each of the classes. This provision the Senate struck from the bill, returning to the old plan of fixing the salary of the superintendent in each individual case, and the striking from the bill of this provision made it necessary for the House to recede upon the amendments hereinafter named, all of which, save one, fixes the salary of the superintendents of the various specially appropriated-for schools at the amount heretofore appropriated appropriated for schools at the amount heretofore appropriated therefor. The amendments thus affected are: Nos. 19, 20, 21, 22, 24, 25, 27, 28, 31, 32, 33, 34, 58, 59, 60, 61, 64, 65, 78, 79, 83, 84, 85, 86, 110, 111, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 128, 129, 133, 134, 135, 136, 140, 141, 142, 147, 148, 151, 152, 153, 154, 159, 160, 163, 164, 172 173, 181, 182, 183, 184.

Amendments Nos. 13 and 14 are simply a transposition of Amendment No. 16 provides that where the duties of an agency have been devolved by order of the Commissioner upon any superintendent of schools the Commissioner may increase the compensation of such superintendent not exceeding $300 a Amendment No. 18 provides for the further allotments to the Indians of the Moqui Reservation in Arizona under the provisions of the act of 1887.

Amendment No. 23 provides for the issuance by the Secretary of War of 60 Springfield cadet rifles for the use of the students at the Phoenix, Ariz., school.

Amendment No. 26 provides that the Secretary of the Interior may use a portion of the $300,000 heretofore appropriated for the creation of an irrigation system for the Pima Indians in the payment of the Pima Indians' proportionate share of the construction of the Salt River irrigation project.

Amendment No. 29 provides for the payment of $503.50 to the Round Valley Indians of California for 402 acres of land on their reservation, erroneously entered by homesteaders.

Amendment No. 30 amends the act of 1891 with reference to the Mission Indians of California so as to authorize the Secretary to patent to the Mission Indians such portions of the public lands in California as have been in the possession of the bands or villages of the Mission Indians, and which are not required for their use, and appraise the value of the improvements belonging to any persons who have a valid right in these lands and pay such persons therefor out of the money heretofore appropriated.

Amendments Nos. 35 and 36 together are simply a transposition of an item from one place in the bill to another.

Amendment No. 37 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to acquire title to certain lands in Idaho which he may deem necessary in the construction of a reservoir for the storage of irrigation water for Fort Hall Indians, and further provides that the Secretary may arrange to irrigate the land of white people from the said reservoir at $6 per acre. The amendment further provides how the said sums shall be paid by the said white people.

Amendment No. 38 appropriates $10,000 to pay for the indebtedness incurred in the suppression of smallpox during the fiscal year 1901.

Amendment No. 40 permits the clerks of United States courts in Indian Territory to retain certain fees which they now re-ceive for filing and recording, in addition to those already re-ceived, to enable them to complete their records. Amendment No. 41 makes the filing of a lease in the office of the Indian agent, Union Agency, Ind. T., notice of the existence of such a lease.

Amendment No. 42 appropriates $10,000 and authorizes the Secretary to make contract for the support of orphan Indian children in the Indian Territory. The Senate amendment provided that this contract should be made with a particular orphan home, and the amendment as agreed to strikes the name of this said school from the amendment.

Amendment No. 43 provides that the Secretary of the Interior, or his representative, shall at all times have access to the books and records of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Amendment No. 44 abolishes all tribal courts of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations.

Amendment No. 45 makes an appropriation of $390,257.92, which is placed upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of the Choctaw tribe, that appropriation being made to cancel the obligation of the United States to the Indians under the treaty of 1855.

Amendment No. 46 is a change in the total, made necessary by amendment No. 45.

Amendment No. 48 authorizes the city of McAlester to issue bonds in excess of the present legal maximum for the purchase of sites and the erection of schoolhouses thereon.

Amendment No. 49 removes restrictions on the sale and encumbrance of a certain quarter section of land in Indian Territory. This amendment really simply corrects the name of the present owner carried in the last appropriation bill and the number of such person's allotment, both erroneously stated therein.

Amendments Nos. 50, 51, 52, and 53 as passed by the Senate are all supplanted by substitute amendments, which it is believed covers that part of the provision attempted to be covered by the four amendments above named. The effect of the amendment adopted is to permit a test case to be brought to determine the constitutionality of the act adding to the rolls of the Cherokee Nation children born since the act of 1902 and of the act extending from five to twenty-five years the period of nonalienation of land allotted to Cherokee citizens.

Amendment No. 56 is a correction of an inadvertent omission of a word.

Amendment No. 57 permits the Seneca Indian allottee to confor church and burial purposes 3 acres of land heretofore allotted to him.

Amendment No. 66 strikes from the bill the proposition that the fund to fund the obligation of the Iowa Indians shall draw interest at 5 per cent.

Amendment No. 67 is purely a phraseological one.

Amendment No. 69 funds the treaty obligation of the Kicka-poo Indians in Kansas, and appropriates $64,865.28 for that Amendment No. 71 makes a like provision for the Pottawatomie Indians in Kansas, and appropriates the sum of $230,064.20 for the purpose.

Amendment No. 72 is a change of total made necessary by amendment No. 71.

Amendment No. 73 strikes from the bill the provision that the amount appropriated to fund the Sac and Fox Indians of Missouri shall draw interest at 5 per cent.

Amendment No. 74 adds to the authorization of the Secretary of the Interior in reference to said fund a direction.

Amendments Nos. 75 and 76 are simply phraseological. Amendment No. 77 authorizes an Indian allottee to sell a part of her allotment for cemetery purposes subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Amendment No. 80 makes appropriation for the pay of an Indian agent at White Earth Agency.

Amendment No. 81 is a change of total made necessary by amendment No. 80.

Amendment No. 82 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent of the White Earth Indians, to set aside certain of their lands for town-site purposes and to arrange for the suitable surveying and platting thereof. The amendment makes provision for the appointment of a board to appraise the lands, the improvements thereon, etc., and for the disposal of said lands and the disposition of the proceeds arising from such Amendment No. 89 provides that the lands withdrawn from entry under the provisions of chapter 3504, first session Fiftyninth Congress, shall be subject to entry in the same manner as other lands ceded in like manner.

Amendment No. 90 appropriates $10,000 for the purpose of completing the survey of certain lands of the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota, and for the reimbursement of said $10,000 to the United States when such lands are disposed of.

Amendment No. 91 is simply to make plainer the intention of Congress in an item passed in the last Indian appropriation bill.

Amendment No. 92 is simply an authorization to the Secretary of the Interior to pay to the White Earth Indians $1,000 of their fund in the Treasury to permit them to spend it for an annual celebration they are accustomed to hold.

Amendment No. 93 makes an appropriation of $30,000 to continue the work of surveying, allotting, and classifying the lands of the Flathead Indians in Montana, and provides that said sum shall be reimbursed to the United States from the sale of surplus lands of said reservation.

Amendment No. 94 authorizes the Indians of the Fort Belknap Reservation to lease not exceeding 20,000 acres of their lands for the cultivation of beet sugar.

Amendments Nos. 95 to 109, both inclusive, provide for the opening of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation in the State of Montana. A bill providing for the opening of this reservation was passed in the first session of the present Congress, but failed to receive the approval of the President. The provisions covered by the several amendments above enumerated open up the same reservation, but upon terms which meet the unqualified approval of the Indian Bureau.

Amendment No. 130 authorizes a slight additional allotment for the Indians of the Standing Rock Reservation, so as to provide them with wood for ordinary domestic purposes.

Amendment No. 131 simply authorizes the Department to permit of the payment provided for in a former statute to be made on April 1 of each year instead of June 1.

Amendment No. 132 provides for the evening up of the allotments of the Indians on the Fort Berthold Reservation.

Amendment No. 137 appropriates $15,000 for sinking an artesian well to provide water for the Wahpeton school, South Dakota.

Amendment No. 139 provides for the allotment to not exceeding twenty-five Indians on the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Reservation. This amendment is intended to cover the allotment to a few Indians who are known as "Mexican captives" of said tribes.

Amendment No. 143 provides for the distribution of a fund of $69,120 which the House provision capitalized for the Osage

Indians in Oklahoma

Amendment No. 145 grants to the town of Pawnee, Okla., for park and educational purposes certain land in said amendment described, and makes provision for its use for the purpose desired.

Amendment No. 149 makes a small appropriation for righting a wrong that would be done either to certain Indians or to white settlers by reason of an erroneous entry of land.

Amendment No. 155 makes more specific the object of an appropriation of $5,000, and amendment No. 156 increases the appropriation by $3,000, and amendment No. 157 makes that $3,000 immediately available.

Amendment No. 161 makes an appropriation of $4,000 for rebuilding and repairing a boiler house at the Pierre School, South Amendment No. 165 makes an appropriation of $3,000 available for the erection of employees' quarters instead of for an office building at Rapid City School.

Amendment No. 166 authorizes certain Indian allottees on the Standing Rock Agency to dispose of a certain portion of their allotments for a right of way for a railroad extension. All proceedings are subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior.

Amendment No. 167 authorizes a payment to a person who brought a case in court to test the right of certain allottees on the Sioux Reservation. The disposition of said case was of benefit not alone to the person bringing the suit, but to many others similarly situated.

Amendment No. 168 is a typographical correction.

Amendment No. 169 is an appropriation of $6,000 for the erection of a laundry at the Indian insane asylum.

Amendment No. 170 authorizes the allotment from the surplus lands on the Pine Ridge and Cheyenne River reservations to persons of said tribes who, under the terms of the laws heretofore passed, were not entitled to allotments.

Amendment No. 174 makes an appropriation of $5,000 applicable for the support of Piute Indians who are in northern Arizona as well as in southern Utah.

Amendment No. 175 appropriates $2,000 for the rebuilding of a sawmill on the Tulalip Reservation.

Amendment No. 176 appropriates $4,000 for the construction of a telephone line on the Yakima Reservation.

Amendment No. 177 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to sell such lands of the Indians heretofore set apart for church and cemetery purposes within the city of Tacoma, Wash., as are not now needed for that purpose.

Amendment No. 178 provided for the distribution of $1,500,000 set apart by the last appropriation act for the Colville Indians set apart by the last appropriation act for the Colville Indians in Washington. As amended by the conferees, the amendment provides that $300,000 only of the $1,500,000 in the Treasury belonging to these Indians shall be expended for their benefit, and in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior deems wise.

Amendment No. 185 makes $25,000 of the $100 00 appropriated for irrigation on the Wind River Reservation immediately available.

Amendment No. 186 appropriates $1,400 for restoring the Pope

Agie River to its original course.

Amendment No. 187 authorizes the leasing of a medicinal spring, with the land about it, upon the Wind River Reservation, in Wyoming, for the purpose of erection and maintenance thereon of a sanatorium, said lease to be made under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

ALLOTMENT AND DISTRIBUTION OF INDIAN TRIBAL FUNDS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 5290) providing for the allotment and distribution of Indian tribal funds, and ask for the reading of the

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up the conference report. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5290) providing for the allotment and distribution of Indian tribal funds, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2. That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, and agree sion among its members, under such rules, regulations, and conditions as he may prescribe.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this is a full agreement, and I move to agree to the conference report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentleman would state just the condition the bill is in now.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I will ask, then, that the statement be read, as that will answer the gentleman's question much more fully than I can.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement. The Clerk read the statement of the conferees, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The effect of the amendment is as follows: The allotments are to be made by the Secretary of the Interior and not under the direction of the President.

Some of the other amendments are merely verbal, not changing the effect of the bill.

The bill as it passed the House required that the allottee should release all further interest in the tribal or trust funds upon drawing his allotted share. As amended by the Senate, and agreed to by the conferees, the allottee would still retain his right to any subsequent additions that might be made to the trust funds after the allotment. He would only release his proportion at the date of such release. There are some tribes that have funds coming from the sale of timber, their permanent annuities and like sources, which would continue to inure to the benefit of the allottee under the bill as reported by the conferees, after the payment of the share originally allotted.

BETTER REGISTRATION OF BIRTHS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 4506) to provide for the better registration of births in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out insert the following:

Provided further, That the Secretaries of the Interior and of the Treasury are hereby directed to withhold from such apportionment and allotment a sufficient sum of the said Indian funds as may be necessary or required to pay any existing claims against said Indians that may be pending for settlement by judicial determination in the Court of Claims or in the Executive Departments of the Government, at time of such apportionment and allotment.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following:

SEC, 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay any Indian who is bilind, crippled, decrepit, or helpless from old age, disease, or accident, his or her share, or any portion thereof, of the tribal trust funds in the United States Treasury belonging to the tribe of which such Indian is a member, and of any other money which may hereafter be placed in the Treasury for the credit of such tribe and susceptible of divisions and the proposed by such and susceptible of divisions of the other money which may hereafter be placed in the Treasury for the credit of such tribe and susceptible of divisions of the credit of such tribe and susceptible of divisions of the person shall, in the District of Columbia, and any person in indicate on any report and such other data, it was a such other field when the absence of a physician or midwife, performs any of the field such as a sufficient sum of the child show in the date of use of said District deem of the Census of the Department of Comme

BALTIMORE AND WASHINGTON TRANSIT COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 22123) to amend "An act to authorize the Baltimore and Washington Transit Company of Maryland to enter the District of Columbia," approved June 8, 1896, as unfinished business. There is a Senate bill on the table covering the same subject, Mr. Speaker, and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill may be considered in lieu of the House bill and the House bill laid on the table.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be reported, so that the House may know what it is considering.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Senate bill will be reported. The gentleman from Wisconsin can withdraw the House bill if he sees proper, and call up the Senate bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. I withdraw the House bill then.

Mr. JAMES. Is unanimous consent necessary in order to withdraw that House bill?

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair thinks not.

Mr. JAMES. The House bill, if I remember it, was amended in the Committee of the Whole, and a vote was pending on the amendment in the House when the point of no quorum was raised.

Mr. MANN. Will not the bill have to be read?

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds unanimous consent is required to call up the Senate bill.

Mr. JAMES. Then I object.

Mr. JAMES.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read. The Chair will say this comes as unfinished business, as the Chair understands.

Mr. BABCOCK. The point of no quorum was made to this bill, after being reported from the Committee of the Whole to the House.

Mr. JAMES. If the gentleman will withdraw his objection to this amendment, I have no objection to passing the bill with the amendment which the Committee of the Whole adopted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be reported to the House. It was in the House several days ago, and we can not recall the terms of the bill.

Was the House dividing upon the bill? The SPEAKER.

Mr. BABCOCK. It was.

The SPEAKER. And the point of no quorum was made when the House was dividing upon the question. The question now is upon the first amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House to the House and whether the House will agree to the amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it proper to make a motion of that kind and simply ask for a vote on an amendment without the House being informed by the reading of the bill as to the character of the bill?

The SPEAKER. Oh, without objection the amendment can be read, but it comes as unfinished business. The House was dividing, the question was upon agreeing to the amendment, and the point of no quorum was made. Now, without objection, the amendment can be reported.

Mr. SHERLEY. But can the House intelligently now pass upon the matter without knowing to what the amendment applies? Ought we not to have the bill read?

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair could not say how much—
Mr. SHERLEY. Is it in the province—
The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 6, after the word "Northwest," strike out the words:

"That the said company is further empowered to extend its line, under the provisions of this act, from its line on Aspen street through Willow street whenever the requirements of its patrons and the operation of the road may require: *Provided*, That said company shall acquire thereby no right to extend its said railway over, along, or upon any portion of the aforementioned route which is not now a dedicated street of the said District of Columbia until it shall have obtained the written consent of the owner or owners of the real property covered thereby or acquired said right of way by condemnation."

And insert the following:

"Provided*, That said company shall not construct its said railway over, along, or upon any portion of the aforementioned route which is not now a public highway of the District of Columbia until it shall have obtained, by dedication or condemnation, title to a right of way not less than 30 feet in width along such portion of said route as is not now a public highway; and before it shall have authority to lay tracks in said right of way it shall dedicate the same to the District of Columbia as a public highway."

Mr. BABCOCK. There is no objection to that amendment.

Mr. BABCOCK. There is no objection to that amendment. Mr. JAMES. I have no objection to that amendment. The amendment I had reference to was in regard to a reduction of street-car fares.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment. Which amendment does the gentleman from Kentucky desire a separate vote upon?

Mr. JAMES. In the Committee of the Whole the section relating to 5-cent fares was stricken out and 4 cents was supplied in its place—or rather the word "six" was stricken out, and the word "eight" was supplied; so as to make it "eight tickets for a quarter.

Was that amendment agreed to in the Com-The SPEAKER.

mittee of the Whole?

Mr. JAMES. Yes, sir; and I ask a separate vote upon that

The SPEAKER. Then the other amendments will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. May I make a statement, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Applying to this amendment? There are other amendments that the Chair is trying to get rid of, as is usually the practice, a separate vote having been demanded upon If there is no further separate vote demanded, the Chair will put the question on the other amendment.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I want to know if I understand it properly. My understanding is that when the bill was put back in the House the Speaker asked if there was a separate vote demanded on any amendment. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], as I remember it, said that he wanted a separate vote on the amendment making a 4-cent fare and eight tickets for a quarter, and the vote was taken and demonstrated that there was no quorum present. The question of no quorum was raised, and pending that an adjournment was taken.

The SPEAKER. Were the other amendments agreed to.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. It was on the separate vote.
Mr. JAMES. These other amendments had all been agreed to, and the only question before the House-

The SPEAKER. The Journal, the Chair is informed, does not show that. Without objection, the amendments other than the one referred to, as indicated by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. James], will be considered as agreed to. The Clerk will now report the amendment upon which the separate vote was demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 5, strike out "five" and insert "four;" line 8, strike out "six" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

"That the said company, in conjunction with the Capital Traction Company, may receive a rate of fare not exceeding 4 cents for each passenger for one continuous ride over the route aforesaid and the route of the said Capital Traction Company within the District of Columbia or any part thereof, and shall sell tickets at the rate of eight for 25 cents."

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word on this amendment, so that the House will understand it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, 1 call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

Is it in order to debate an amendment that Mr. SHERLEY.

is about to be put to the House?
The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the Journal does not show that the previous question was ordered.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. But the vote had been taken.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bab-

COCK] is entitled to recognition.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to make a statement so that the House will understand clearly what they are This amendment was adopted in the Committee of voting on. the Whole on the bill permitting this suburban road coming in through Maryland as applying to the District of Columbia, namely, a single fare of 4 cents and eight tickets sold for 25 I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that this would be a burden on that road that they could not carry, and, in my opinion, if adopted would prevent the construction of the road.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Barcock] yield the floor, reserve his time, or does he yield?

Mr. BABCOCK. I move the previous question on this amendment.

Mr. JAMES. I hope this will not prevail. The gentleman made an argument and then moves the previous question.

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not want to cut anybody off.

no argument except a statement of facts.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Babcock] yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. James]; and if so, how much time?

Mr. JAMES. I will not take very long. Mr. BABCOCK. Five minutes.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, originally this amendment which provided for eight tickets for 25 cents on this line was adopted in the Committee of the Whole by a vote of forty majority. Then it went into the House to be acted upon. By a vote of perhaps six majority they reversed the action of the Committee of the Whole and voted to strike out the amendment. Now, this amendment provides that eight tickets shall be sold for 25 cents and 4 cents charged for one single fare. As we have seen this morning, whenever you get an opportunity to make all of these street-car lines come in under a 3-cent fare, the parliamentary status is such that it is always ruled out of order. T took that position in the Committee of the Whole the other day, as I have stated, and I said then that the only way to do this thing was to provide for eight tickets for a quarter under these franchises that were being given them, and that it would bring about such competition in this District you could have a 3-cent rate, because if we could not get legislation here that would force it, competition would do so, and in that way we could obtain it.

We see that the railroad companies in Iowa, the railroad companies in Pennsylvania, the railroad companies in Ohio, in Indiana, and in Nebraska are being forced by their respective legislatures to carry passengers for 2 cents a mile. It costs ten times as much to operate those railroads as it does a street car line, and it costs a great deal more to construct them. Yet this Congress will be giving out valuable franchises here to street car companies that would be permitted to charge 5 cents for a mile, or a quarter of a mile, or 5 cents for three-quarters of a We sit here and give out these franchises without a dollar and throw upon the people the burden of paying this extraordinary fare.

I call upon Congress to keep step with the drum beat of reform, as sounded by the legislatures of this country, and strike a blow right here at organized greed and stop giving these franchises out without you limit the rapacity of these com-panies, because when you do not the parliamentary situation will never allow you to so amend the bill that it will give relief to the people, as was shown here this morning. [Applause.]

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. JAMES. Division, Mr. Speaker. The committee divided; and there were—ayes 69, noes 43.

So the amendment was agreed to. [Applause.]

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 22580) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty, stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 21574. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes,

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below

S. 8486. An act to amend an act to authorize the Baltimore and Washington Transit Company, of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia, approved June 8, 1896—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

FIRE ESCAPES ON CERTAIN BUILDINGS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for consideration of the bill H. R. 19524.

The bill was read, as follows:

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for consideration of the bill H. R. 19524.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19524) to amend an act entitled "An act to require the erection of fire escapes in certain buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 19, 1906.

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 1, 2, 3, 5, 11, and 13 of an act entitled "An act to require the erection of fire escapes in certain buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 19, 1906, are hereby amended as follows:

Amend section 1 so as to read:

"Sec. 1. That it shall be the duty of the owner, entitled to the beneficial use, rental, or control of any building three or more stories in height, or over 30 feet in height, constructed or used or intended to be used as a tenement house, apartment house, flat, hotel, hospital, seminary, academy, school, college, institute, dormitory, asylum, sanitarium, hall, or place of amusement, including office building or store not exempted as in this act hereinafter provided, to provide and cause to be erected and fixed to every such building, connecting with each observed and fixed to every such building, connecting with each of above the first floor of every such building, connecting with each of above the first floor of every such building, connecting with each of a such material, type, and construction as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may determine."

Amend section 2 so as to read:

"Sec. 2. That it shall be the duty of the owner entitled to the beneficial use, rental, or control of any building already erected, or which may hereafter be erected, in which ten or more persons are employed at the same time in any of the stories above the second story, except buildings used wholly as stores or for office purposes, and having at least two stairways each 3 or more feet wide and separated from each other by a distance of at least 30 feet, from one of which stairways is shall be easy access to the roof, to provide and cause to

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Page 2, line 3, strike out the word "including" and insert the word

Page 2, line 16, insert before the word "buildings" the words "three story;" also strike out the word "wholly" and insert the word "exclusively."

Page 2, line 18, insert before the word "each" where it appears the first time in said line the words "from the ground floor."

Page 3, line 15, insert after the word "are" the words "used solely for office buildings above the second floor and."

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I yield my time to the gentleman from Kansas, who reported the bill.

Mr. SIMS. I want to have five minutes in opposition to the

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this bill is in the nature of an amendment to the fire-escape law passed by Con-

Mr. SULZER. Let me ask the gentleman what is the object of the amendment?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The object of the amendment is to make certain modifications of the law.

Mr. SULZER. Was not the law passed last year a most commendable law?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; and in some respects regarded by the committee, on full consideration, to be probably little too rigid.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask what buildings in the District of Columbia this amendment, if adopted, will exempt?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It will exempt buildings that are considered to be fireproof that are used wholly for office purposes above the second story.

Mr. SULZER. Is here any building in Washingon that is fireproof?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I doubt it. The building itself may be. Many buildings that are built of fireproof materials are, when occupied, filled with combustible articles

Mr. TOWNE. The old Patent Office was supposed to be fireproof.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Many of the buildings are built

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Many of the buildings are built to be fireproof, but the contents are combustible.

Mr. SULZER. If it is the opinion of the gentleman from Kansas that there are no fireproof buildings in the District, why should we pass this bill amending the law excepting certain buildings in the city, the owners of which want to avoid putting up fire escapes that would save life in case of fire? Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. We are exempting buildings that are used solely for office purposes, that contain little or no combustible material. They are not occupied as sleeping rooms; they do not contain curtains and such other combustible materials as are used in sleeping apartments, apartment houses, hotels, seminaries, or buildings of that character.

Mr. SULZER. Is it not a fact, also, that if this bill should become law it would exempt certain residences in the District of Columbia?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Well, if there were more than 10 people in the building it would not except a residence if was more than three stories high. The committee has given a great deal of consideration to this bill, and I will say to the gentleman from New York that I have taken the posi-tion that he takes, so far as buildings occupied at night by any considerable number of people are concerned, so far as a buildconsiderable number of people are concerned, so far as a build-ing is concerned in which people in large numbers sleep, or buildings occupied as apartment houses or hotels. They ought not to be considered as fireproof, exempting them from the re-quirement to have fire escapes. When dealing with buildings that are used for offices a different question arises.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, this is a very peculiar bill. I am sorry the gentleman has changed his views on this question. The bill is fundamentally bad, and it should be beaten. I am opposed to amending the present fire-escape law. The present law is all right and should be enforced.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman from New York is so often wrong that it is not surprising to find him wrong as to the provisions of this bill. We thought that it was not necessary to require that fire escapes be placed on buildings used wholly for office buildings, where there were stairways and elevators, where the material of which the building is constructed is in every respect fireproof, and there being little or no combustible material in the building.

What is the limitation as to the altitude,

Mr. McCLEARY. What or height, of the building?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. We bring all buildings above three stories that are occupied as hotels, apartment houses, seminaries, theaters, and all buildings of that character within the scope of the law requiring fire escapes.

Mr. SULZER. Let me now ask the gentleman from Kansas if this bill was unanimously reported from the committee?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I shall yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], a member of the committee, who is, I believe, opposed to the bill.

Mr. SULZER. I believe he is opposed to this bill. Let me ask the gentleman another question. Have the District Commissioners recommended the change or repeal of the existing law?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They have, urgently. The fire chief has recommended it, the business men's association in the city have recommended it and urged its passage.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do you suppose there ever was a worse fire trap built in modern times than this police court building down here?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am not acquainted with either the construction or the material in that building.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The papers say that they built a great building down there, where there will be as many as five hundred or a thousand people sometimes in the building, and built one 4-foot stairway to the upper story, and then such a racket was raised about that that they undertook to put in some more stairways and built them out of pine.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. How high is that building? Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I don't know. It has an upstairs to it. I suppose it is three stories high.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Then it may come within the scope of this law.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the reason somebody did not get hold of those fellows when they were putting up that building in that way?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They must put fire escapes on that building if it comes within the scope of the law that was enacted last year, as amended by this bill.

Mr. TOWNE. Do I understand the committee are moved to make these amendments on the theory that the requirement of fire escapes is a hardship to the owners of property?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have some buildings in mind here that are wholly used for office buildings, that were constructed before the enactment of the old law, to which it would be impracticable to attach fire escapes.

Mr. TOWNE. As I understand it, the law requires no specific form of fire escape, does it?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; only such fire escapes as may be designated by the Commissioners of the District of Satisfactory to the Commissioners? Mr. TOWNE.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. TOWNE. Does not the committee know that it is quite practicable to equip any form of business or residential structure with a quite efficient fire escape at a very moderate cost?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have in mind a building here that has no hallways leading to a window or a door in the outside wall of the building. Every room must be provided with a fire escape to equip the building under the law as it now

Mr. TOWNE. But the people are in the offices and would have to escape from them.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. A fire escape would be required at every office window in such a building, which would be impracticable.

Mr. TOWNE. Does the gentleman think that these structures can be made too safe?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not at all; but here are buildings that are used wholly for office purposes, that are occupied

Mr. SULZER. Most of these large office buildings in this city are also occupied at night.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The testimony before the committee was that these buildings were not occupied at night except by the watchmen.

Mr. SULZER. That is not quite true. Most of the large office buildings in the District of Columbia, to my personal knowledge, are occupied at night—that is, up to 10 or 11 or 12 o'clock.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Our hearings brought out the fact that the buildings were occupied in the daytime, and were occupied at night by the watchmen. The gentleman from New York may have information not available to the committee.

Mr. SULZER. Now, just a minute to say I just want to make this comment regarding this bill amending the law which we this comment regarding this bill amending the law which we passed last year after deliberation and much discussion, which, in my opinion, was a very good law. If these amendments are adopted, they will so mutilate that law that the people who own these buildings in the District of Columbia will practically escape any liability for evading putting up proper fire escapes that will to some extent protect and safeguard life. I think this is a very bad bill and ought not to pass. I shall vote against it, and, I repeat, I indulge the hope that it will be I shall vote defeated. And now, if the gentleman from Kansas can give us a good reason why the law ought to be amended to exempt the special interests and a few people, I would like to hear the reasons.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, the bill does not propose to protect special interests; it is proposed to modify the law in a sane way, to exempt buildings that are practically fireproof in themselves, and do not contain combustible material, and are not occupied in the nighttime, and that are not occupied as living rooms or hotels.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does not that rest in the discretion of the Commissioners now to exempt such buildings in such cases?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not at all. We have required in that law passed last year that all buildings over three stories high shall be provided with fire escapes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. When was the act passed?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. A year ago.

Why have not the Commissioners car-Mr. GOLDFOGLE. ried out the law?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Because many people in the District have hoped that Congress would pass the law that we are trying to pass to-day

Mr. SULZER. The proposition, then, is that they would rather not pay out a few dollars to put up proper fire escapes and take chances of destruction of life by fire? It is a queer proposition.

Mr. TOWNE. May I ask the gentleman a question for information?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNE. This law was passed a year ago? Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. TOWNE. Does the gentleman recall within what time these fire escapes were to be put on the buildings in the District? Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. My recollection is ninety days after the law was passed. I may not be correct as to that.

Mr. TOWNE. And no attempt having been made to carry out the law, you now propose to exempt them by amending the original law?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In some instances the provisions of the law have not been enforced by the Commissioners.

Mr. TOWNE. Is that the reason why the committee proposes to relieve the delinquents?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; we are not relieving them from the provisions of the law. We are offering to modify the law. Mr. TOWNE. The delinquents appeared before the committee and asked to be excused from compliance with the law and requested the committee to amend the law so that their delinquencies should not be forbidden by the law. Is that the proposition?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not at all, not at all.

Mr. TOWNE. Did they make any excuse of not being able to comply with the law or merely that it was impracticable?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In one case it was said that it was impracticable; that it would require a fire escape from every room in the building.

Mr. TOWNE. Did anybody suggest that that was not the fault of anybody except the fault of the construction of the building which it was the purpose of the law to correct and make safe?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The building was constructed prior to the enactment of the law and is wholly occupied by offices above the first floor.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The law having been passed requiring the Commissioners to have the fire escapes erected, and the Commissioners having failed to carry out the law, does not the gentleman think they should carry out the law or else get out and resign their office.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I may be pardoned if I leave that with the gentleman from New York and the Commissioners.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I don't want it left with me, but I want to know whether the gentleman doesn't think that when Congress passes a law requiring the Commissioners to do certain things they ought to carry it out-the law?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I agree with the gentleman from New York that the laws of Congress should be enforced.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. That being so, why should we proceed to pass a law which in effect will excuse the delinquents of the District or District authorities?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The law which we enacted a year ago was to cover theaters, hotels, apartment houses, and buildings used by manufacturers above the third story where a large number of people were employed. We did not have in mind, or at least I did not have in mind buildings that were occupied solely for office purposes in the daytime and containing cupied solely for omce purposes in the daytime and containing little or no combustible material.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Did the Commissioners require fire escapes to be put up on such buildings as the gentleman from Kansas had in mind at the time of the passage of the law?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; they have not.

Mr. BURLESON. Why not?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have made that inquiry of the gentleman in charge before the hearings, and understand that since then there has been some activity in ordering on fire escapes to apartment houses. It was the contention of many people owning apartment houses here that an apartment house that was built wholly of steel and cement was fireproof. It was the contention of the committee and of Congress a year ago that such a building would not be exempted from the provisions of the law requiring fire escapes, even though they were constructed wholly of these noncombustible materials.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The bill was passed for the purpose of safeguarding life and limb. Can the gentleman from Kansas give us any good reason—

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, I am not seeking to exempt any building in which there is any measure of danger to the loss of life and limb and would not. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Why not let this matter pass over until such time as the Commissioners will carry out the purpose and spirit of the law as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Camp-Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Because there are buildings to which it is practically impossible to attach fire escapes under the provisions of the law as it now stands.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. But to such buildings to which the gentleman thinks they ought to be attached.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They are not exempted from the provisions of the law in any sense whatever.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What I want to know is whether the gentleman does not think it is better to let this matter rest until such time as the Commissioners will require fire escapes to be put on buildings where it is necessary to safeguard life and

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would rather have this law passed making exemptions I have suggested, still leaving security to the public, and have the provisions of the law stand and enforced that are necessary for the protection of life and limb.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What better guaranty have we in that case that the law will be carried out?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If we make this amendment, there will be no hope then that the law will be modified further. There is not any alternative now, is there, in the law?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Except that the owners of many of these buildings had hoped that there would be a modification of this law that would relieve them. I would say that when the bill was introduced here to amend the law, it contemplated exempting all fireproof buildings, however occupied.

Mr. SULZER. But the trouble with the gentleman's contention is that there are no fireproof buildings in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, as a general proposition I concede the correctness of the statement of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HINSHAW. Does this exempt apartment houses from the fire-escape law?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It does not.

None whatever? Mr. HINSHAW.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. None whatever, if they are over three stories high.

Mr. TOWNE. As I understood the gentleman a moment ago, there is no requirement in that law for any specific form of construction of the fire escape. Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Except that they shall be of suitable material. I have not in mind now the specifications.

Mr. SULZER. That is left to the discretion of the Commis-I have not in mind now the specifications

sioners

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.
Mr. TOWNE. Very well. I have heard it intimated that there are certain buildings in the District to which it is impracticable to attach any form of fire escape, but it seems to me, if the gentleman will permit me to make the observation, that that operates upon the theory either that it is in itself impracticable to make any kind of a fire escape other than some extraneous or permanent attachment to a building, or that the law requires some such attachment to the building. My recollection is that the law does not require any structure of a permanent nature all the way up and down a building, for example, but that there shall be a fire escape provided, subject to the inspection and approval of the Commissioners of the District, suitable to the ordinary purposes of fire escapes.

Now, the gentleman very well knows that a comparatively slight attachment at windows, whence escape, of course, must ordinarily be made, is enough to permit the occupants to lower themselves to the ground with the apparatus provided inside of the room. I have seen, and no doubt the gentleman has, many forms of fire escapes that are not permanently attached like stairways or spiral descents to the ground, but are availed of by attaching some sort of mechanical implement provided in the room to a permanent strong structure near or adjoining the window, from whence descent may be made safely to the Now, I do not think, if that kind of fire escape is permissible under the law, that there is either any impracticability or hardship in the requirement.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What would the gentleman from New York do with a building that had no hallways extending to the outer wall of the building? It would be required in a case of that kind that there should be a fire escape from every office in the building.

Mr. TOWNE. Absolutely; and I think there ought to be.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Separate and distinct.

Mr. TOWNE. I think there ought to be.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Let us get down to the issue that is raised in this bill. Does the gentleman from New York now hold that there is a very great necessity for a fire escape from a building that is erected of noncombustible material, in which there is little or no combustible furniture, occupied almost wholly by office people in the daytime? Understand, there should be fire escapes from theaters, and seminaries, and apartment houses, and hotels, and store buildings, and factories.

Mr. TOWNE. I will answer the gentleman this way: It must be said that some sort of structures, by reason of the uses to which they are devoted, ought to be furnished with fire escapes to a greater degree of efficiency, that there is more reason for giving them this sort of equipment than other forms of structure; but I say this to the gentleman, I do not think there is any good reason why a single structure to be inhabited at any time by human beings for any purpose in the District of Columbia ought not to be required to furnish means of escape from fire, and that the furnishing of the fire escape is part of the regular business of the owner of the building. think that there are many structures that ought to be without a fire escape, and I think recent happenings in various parts of the country emphasize the importance, especially when it can be done at a very reasonable figure. It is not a hardship. No-body ought to be allowed to build a building in these days without providing escape in case of fire from every place that is being used in that building.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The proposed amendment makes change in existing law by exempting the owners of buildings that are occupied as office buildings and in the daytime, and I see no reason why the recommendations of the Commissioners and of the business men who have insisted upon its passage should not be heeded by this House.

Mr. McNARY, Mr. Speaker— The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question. Mr. McNARY. I would like to have the gentleman turn his attention to page 4, section 13; and will the gentleman kindly tell me what is the reason for the inclusion of these words, "but only so far as the same are inconsistent?" What is the purpose? Is there some new rule of construction, some decision on that point? Why is it not sufficient to have it read as it has always read in my knowledge of legislation, "that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and the same are, hereby repealed?'

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will consent to that amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Can we get that amendment in now?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts shall offer that amendment now.

Well, I now ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment to strike out, on page 4, in line 12, after the word "herewith," the words "but only so far as the same are inconsistent.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk with report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 12, strike out the words "but only so far as the same are inconsistent."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. McNARY. Now a further question.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I want to yield some time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], but I will answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. McNARY. In reference to page 3, I should like to ask the gentleman from Kansas to tell this House whether or not he believes that the regulations of the District of Columbia are sufficiently strong to make the office buildings described therein fireproof. It says, in line 18, page 3:

That such buildings that are used solely for office buildings above the second floor, and defined under the buildings regulations of the District of Columbia to be fireproof, are exempted under this act as to fire escapes.

And farther on it provides that the same buildings shall have automatic iron shutters or wire glass in fireproof sash and frames when they are close to a building that is not regarded as fireproof under the District building regulations. I would like him to tell the House, if he has knowledge, as to what are the building regulations of the District of Columbia as regards fireproof buildings. Are they strict or are they weak; do they really provide for fireproof buildings or do they only use the term in the ordinary sense, meaning a building put up with some approach to fireproof material, but which is not really fireproof?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have only such information as has been given to the committee by the officer in charge for the District Commissioners. He informed the subcommittee in charge of this bill that the regulations for the construction of fireproof buildings were as stringent here as elsewhere in the country. They use steel and cement, and such noncombustible materials as that in the construction of fireproof buildings.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. Speaker, I want only to say to the gentleman that I never yet have seen any of the so-called "fire-proof buildings" prove to be fireproof under test of fire, and for my part I do not believe that the regulations in this District are sufficiently strong to insure that the buildings are fire-proof. It seems to me that we are here exempting a class of buildings of which we have not accurate knowledge as to whether they are really fireproof, and that we ought not to do it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman will probably be able to answer this: Is it now required in any considerable number of the cities of the country that there shall be fire escapes upon office buildings?

Mr. McNARY. I think it is, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the gentleman now recall that there are fire escapes upon office buildings in any city that he can now recall?

Mr. McNARY. Yes. There are fire escapes, to my personal knowledge, on many of the buildings in the city of Boston, required by law upon buildings erected under modern conditions, as regards strength of material and fireproof qualities. My friends here [Messrs. Sulzer and Goldfolle] say it is so in New York. I know that the requirements and building regulations in Boston make that the case.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would like to know whether or not there are fire escapes to the Flatiron Building in New York?

Mr. McNARY. That I can not answer.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman from New York

[Mr. Towne] may be able to answer that question.

Mn. TOWNE. I will say to the gentleman that there ought to be. That is what we are talking about here—what the law cucht to be.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am now asking legislation that represents the sentiment of the people of the District of Columbia. I assume that the Flatiron Building in New York would be provided with fire escapes, it being an office building, if the sentiment of the people of New York required fire escapes to office buildings.

Mr. McNARY. Will the gentleman allow me to say, in view of that answer to the question, that I have not any doubt but that what he states is the sentiment of the people whose names he has given on the floor is correct. I have not any question that a large number of business men have expressed the opinion that these exemptions ought to be made. I have never yet known in any city where business people or builders were consulted but that they demanded and said that many fire regulations and fire-escape regulations should be disregarded. As a matter of fact, we meet that every time building laws are discussed. It is only when we get a body of men entirely independent of these builders and business men that we get strict regulations. I have had the honor of serving on legislative committees that had to do with the regulations in the city of Boston in the past, and we almost invariably found business men, owning and occupying buildings, and any number of builders, too, who declared these regulations ought not to be made so strict. But when we organized a commission to revise the building regulations and to bring the laws into proper shape, we invariably found that such a commission, studying the question independently and having no ownership or financial interest in the buildings, always favored having the laws made strict as regards fireproofing construction and proper fire escapes. And for that reason I do not believe that the sentiment of the business people whose names he has given ought to govern us in this matter; and I move you, sir, to strike

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I did not yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. McNARY. I will ask it later, at the proper time, if the gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee ten minutes, or such time as he desires.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I oppose this bill, and I wish to state in a few words why. In the first place, the fire-escape law now is a general law. If we commence to make exceptions, we do not know where it will end. To put in the hands of the Commissioners to say what buildings shall and what shall not have fire escapes will put a matter of worry in their hands and a matter of pressure on them that would be almost beyond human endurance to stand. We know if the fire-escape law is not amended that it will prove a very great hardship on certain gentlemen who own certain buildings in the city of Washington that were constructed before we had this law, such as the Star Building, the Munsey Building, and others. I personally vis-ited the Munsey Building, and in order to comply with that law it will cause the owner or owners of that building to sustain a very great financial loss. There is no doubt about it. Although it is a very great hardship to be compelled to do this on what they built for and intended to be a fireproof building, I am like the gentleman from New York, and do not believe, in the sense in which we use that term in a practical way, that there are any fireproof buildings. There may be walls and partitions and stairways that will not burn out, but there is always sufficient combustible materials in a building to start a fire, and that starts a panic, and the panic results often in the death of many people where there was no contact with fire at all. The greater confidence that the inhabitants of these buildings can have that in case of fire they can escape, the less liable they are to become panicky and jump out of the windows or run over each other and be killed. These particular buildings will be occupied by hundreds of people in the day. It may be impossible to burn that building, in fact; but if a fire started in the combustible material, there is more danger of having all the horrors of a panic brought about where there are no fire escapes to the building than where there are. But if you give more and greater opportunities to escape, there is less liability that the people occupying the building will become panicky and lose their lives

Mr. McNARY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if it is true that the italicized words in line 18 on page 3, which I quote, as follows: "Used only for office building above the second floor," are not contained in the present bill, and if the buildings are not now required to have fire escapes, and whether the purpose of the bill is not to exempt those particular buildings?

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman is correct, and that is the purpose of it.

Mr. McNARY. What is the reason for exempting them?
Mr. SIMS. To me there is no reason. The gentlemen who support the bill offer as a reason that the building being fire proof it is not necessary; but I think it is necessary.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Do you think there are any fireproof build-

Mr. SIMS. I do not think there is any such thing as a fireproof building in the sense of not being dangerous to human life occupying those buildings if a fire takes place within it. I sympathize with many of these people in the loss they will have to sustain. It is a question between dollars and the possible loss of human life, and who would be willing to weigh these in that scale? There is not a man in this House who would vote to save this Capitol from fire if to do so would call for the sacrifice of one human life, however humble the person might be.

Mr. McNARY. Does not the gentleman understand that in a majority of instances what are known as "office buildings" in every large city in the country are used night as well as day, and that men work there until 11 and 12 o'clock at night, and sometimes all night; and yet the main argument made in favor of this bill is that these buildings are used exclusively in the daytime?

Mr. SIMS. If they were used exclusively in the daytime, I would still be opposed to the bill. As I have tried to show to the House, I want to have as much confidence as possible afforded to the occupants of these buildings that they will be able to save themselves and to have the greatest number of instrumentalities by which they may save themselves, because that confidence prevents panic, which often results in death when the building is not destroyed by fire. [Applause.]

I read of a case in a church in Birmingham, Ala., where a large congregation was assembled in the summer time, when there was not a spark of fire in the building; but for some reason somebody cried "Fire!" The congregation became stampeded, and in attempting to get out of the building, the audience being in the second story, more than fifty people were killed. Fire escapes are put on buildings for the purpose of giving people confidence in their safety. Very few buildings, compared with the whole number, that have fire escapes on them ever burn; so, in fact, the number of fire escapes called into actual use is very small. Why should we exempt certain buildings? The zone of exempted buildings will continually extend. The pressure upon the Commisioners will be more than they can stand. Rather than see this law modified or repealed, I would vote out of the Treasury of the United States an indemnity for the loss to these individuals, if they sustain any, rather than take the chance of destroying one human life, however humble, whether old or young. There never will be a building erected that is entirely safe from fire or from the result of the fear of fire, and these, in gross, are the reasons, rather crudely given, why I think we had better let the law stand as it is. I do not wish to take up the time of the House

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I allow no Member of this House to occupy a position of guarding life or limb any more carefully than I would; but in advocating the passage of this bill making amendments to the present law providing for fire escapes, I do not believe that we are endangering in the least degree the life or limb of any person in the District of Columbia. The bill, prepared by the District Commissioners and urged by them for passage, stated that such buildings as are defined under the building regulations in the District of Columbia to be fireproof shall be exempt. The committee Columbia to be fireproof shall be exempt. The committee amended the bill so as to provide that such buildings as are used solely for office buildings above the second floor shall be exempt.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have advocated the passage of this bill not because I want to relieve anybody from doing anything that will increase safety to human life, but in the hope that in making the modifications of the law that we passed last year we will be able to secure the enforcement of the law that remains after the passage of this act. I therefore ask for a vote.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas move the previous question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I move the previous question. BURTON of Delaware. Then the gentleman will not yield for an amendment?

Mr. McNARY. I hope the gentleman will permit me to offer an amendment

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield for the reading of the amendment?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, yes; I yield.
Mr. McNARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement in regard to this amendment of mine.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield one minute. Mr. McNARY. Mr. Speaker, I offer this amendment because I believe the present law ought not to be changed in that re-The law is good as it stands, and for that reason I do not believe the building regulations

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What is the amendment that the gentleman offers?

Mr. McNARY. The one I previously suggested, to strike out, on page 3, beginning at line 18, down to line 6, on page 4 in other words, the provision which exempts the so-called "fireproof" office buildings in the District of Columbia. I do not believe they are fireproof; and I believe the Government could better afford, as suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], a member of the committee, to indemnify these people for the expense of putting on the escapes than to incur the danger of losing human life in this District. I now offer my amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the amendment that the gentleman from Massachusetts would offer takes the life out of the bill—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman refuse to yield for that Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I refuse to yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas demands the previous question.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman B from Delaware to offer the amendment or to have it read for information?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield time to offer the amendment for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting the following as a new section: "Sec. —. The provisions of this act shall become operative on and after December 1, 1907."

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Mr. Speaker The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield? Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For one minute.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. If this law is put into force, it will entail an enormous expense on some of the hotels and other buildings in this city, and I offer that amendment in order that the people may have the time between now and the convening of the next Congress in order to carry out the provisions of the law. That is all I have to say.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield for the amendment?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question being taken, Mr. McNary demanded a division. The committee divided; and there wereaves 103, noes 35. So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the ommittee amendment.

The question was taken; and the committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. McNARY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill with instructions to strike out, on pages 3 and 4, that part of section 3 from line 18 to and including line 5.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the bill line 18, on page 3, down to and including line

The SPEAKER. The Clerk, for the information of the committee, will read that portion which the amendment seeks to strike out.

The Clerk read as follows:

That such buildings as are used solely for office buildings above the second floor and defined under the building regulations of the District of Columbia to be fireproof are exempted from the requirements of this act as to fire escapes, guide signs, and alarm gongs; but when the face of a wall of any such fireproof building is within 30 feet of a combustible building or structure, or when the side or sides, front or rear of such building or structure faces within 30 feet of a combustible building, or contains a light or air shaft or similar recess within 30 feet of a combustible building, then each and every window or opening in said wall or walls shall be protected from fire by automatic iron shutters or wire glass in fireproof sash and frames.

The SPEAKER. The motion is to recommit the bill with instructions to the committee to report it back with the section structions to the committee to report it back with the section just read stricken out.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McNary and Mr. Sulzer) there were—ayes 56, noes 81.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SULZER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask if this bill has been en-

The SPEAKER. It doesn't make any difference whether it has or not; it has been read. The House ordered the engrossed bill to be read, and it was read.

Mr. SULZER. Was it the engrossed bill that was read? The SPEAKER. It is like locking the door after the horse as been stolen. [Laughter.] It is totally immaterial whether has been stolen. the engrossed bill has been read or not, because the House has ordered the third reading of the engrossed bill, and it has been read, and it is impossible to do away with that fact.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. Speaker, I renew my call for the yeas

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 95, nays 146, answered "present" 4, not voting 132.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The question was taken; and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Michigan, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

METROPOLITAN POLICE OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 25630) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolian police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901," approved June 8, 1906, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph 2 of the act entitled "An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901," approved June 8, 1906, is hereby amended by adding thereto the following:

"Should the number of privates of class 2 or class 3 be reduced at any time by reason of riot, fire, flood, pestilence, or other similar catastrophe, any vacancy thus created in class 3 shall be filled by the promotion of privates from class 2 who in the order of their length of service in the force have nearest attained the five years' term of service required by act of Congress approved June 8, 1906, provided their conduct and intelligent attention to duty shall justify such promotion: Provided, That any vacancy thus created in class 2 shall be filled by the promotion of privates from class 1 who in the order of their length of service in the force shall have nearest attained the three years' term of service required by said act of June 8, 1906, provided their conduct and intelligent attention to duty shall justify such promotion.

"Should a vacancy occur at any time in the grade of private of class 2 or class 3 by reason of death, removal, or resignation of any private in class 2 or class 3, and should there be no private of class 1 or class 2, as the case may be, eligible for promotion by length of service as required by the act of Congress approved June 8, 1906, to amend section 1 of an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' then, and in that case, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to appoint to class 1 such number of privates, not to exceed ten, as may be necessary to maintain the full complement of the force as allowed by the law making appropriations for the support of the Metropolitan police department of the District of Columbia."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a point of order against that bill. This bill should be on the Union Calendar.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this does not appropriate any money or create any new office.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; but it provides for charges upon the Treasury

The SPEAKER. The Chair, after looking at the bill, fails to find anything on its face that makes a charge upon the Treasury

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, it authorizes promotions not authorized by law from one class to another, and a promotion to the other class means the payment of additional compensation.

The SPEAKER. That is argumentative, purely. It does not upon its face, so far as the Chair can ascertain, make a charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It provides for the appointment of additional police.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Only when vacancies occur.

The SPEAKER. Only when vacancies occur. The Chair will overrule the point of order.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to its final passage.

ANTITIPPING BILL.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 25232) to promote the comfort of patrons of hotels, restaurants, cafés, and eating houses in the District of Columbia, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. I do this because I have had many requests from different Members that the bill be called up.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any guest or patron at any hotel, restaurant, café, or eating house in the District of Columbia to give, or offer to give, to any steward, waiter, porter, or other employee or for any such steward, waiter, porter, or other employee to solicit or receive, or for any proprietor or manager of any such hotel, restaurant, café, or eating house to knowingly permit any such steward, waiter, porter, or other employee to receive from any such guest or patron any gift, compensation, or honorarium other than the regular charges established for such hotel, restaurant, café, or eating house or eating house.

SEC. 2. That any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction, be fined in a sum of not less than five nor more than five hundred dollars.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill if this is the bill which will make me a criminal if I give 25 cents to my waiter?

Mr. BABCOCK. I am suspicious that that is the bill. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to its final

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and the engrossment of the bill for a third reading was refused.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following reso-

Resolved. That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 24134) providing for the granting and patenting to the State of Colorado desert lands formerly in the Southern Ute Indian Reservation in Colorado.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 24640. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested: S. 8426. An act authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and adjudicate the claims of Samuel Garland, deceased, against the Choctaw Nation; S. 7759. An act to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the northern judicial district of the State of California; and

S. 8510. An act to amend an act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents.

RETIREMENT OF NONCOMMISSIONED OFFICERS, PETTY OFFICERS, AND ENLISTED MEN OF THE ARMY, NAVY, AND MARINE CORPS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3638) providing for the retirement of noncommissioned officers, petty officers, and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when an enlisted man shall have served thirty years either in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, or in all, he shall, upon making application to the President, be placed upon the retired list, with 75 per cent of the pay and allowances he may then be in receipt of, and that said allowances shall be as follows: Nine dollars and fifty cents per month in lieu of rations and clothing and $6.25 per month in lieu of quarrers, fuel, and light: Provided, That in computing the necessary thirty years' time all service in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps shall be credited.

Sec. 2. That all acts and parts of acts, so far as they conflict with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to whom the bill applies—to what rank?

Mr. HULL. It applies to none above the rank of enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. It changes the law by allowing those who have served thirty years in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps and who are on the retired list $6.25 a month additional pay. That is all there is in the bill. That is the only change?

Mr. MANN. Mr. HULL. There is no other change in the law. It simply gives the man who serves his country thirty years in the enlisted forces of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps $6.25 a month.

Mr. MANN. Is the allowance more to a noncommissioned officer than to an enlisted man?

Mr. HULL. No; the allowance to a noncommissioned officer is not more than to an enlisted man for commutation of quarters. If an enlisted man is on the active list—

Mr. MANN. I mean in this bill. Does it vary according to whether a man is simply an enlisted man or noncommissioned officer?

Mr. HULL. The noncommissioned officers and enlisted men get exactly the same commutation of quarters. There is no difference between the man who is a private and the man who is a sergeant in commutation of quarters, and the possible amount carried by the bill, if it shall pass, on the retired force as it stands to-day as estimated by the War Department, is $170,000 a year.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This bill included enlisted men?

Mr. HULL. That is all it deals with. That is the only force it deals with.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It says enlisted men and noncommissioned officers

Mr. HULL. The noncommissioned officer is an enlisted man. That is all.

Mr. Speaker, I may say this bill will help re-Mr. HAY. cruiting, and it is a bill which is unanimously reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chairs hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Hull, the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CLAIMS OF SAC AND FOX INDIANS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take the bill (S. 8533) to authorize the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and adjudicate the claims of the Sac and Fox Indians of Mississippi in Iowa, against the Sac and Fox Indians of Mississippi in Oklahoma, and the United States, and for other purposes, from the Speaker's table and consider the same at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That full legal and equitable jurisdiction, without regard to lapse of time, is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and adjudicate, as justice and equity shall require, with right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by any party in interest, all claims of the Sac and Fox Indians of the Mississippi in lowa, against the Sac and Fox Indians of the Mississippi in Oklahoma, and the United States for money claimed to be due to them as their proportionate shares, according to their numbers, and not heretofore paid to or expended for them, of the appropriations made by Congress for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the confederated tribes of the Sac and Fox Indians of the Mississippi, or arising from the disposal or sale of lands of said confederated tribes, or otherwise, including the claims set out in the Senate Document No. 64, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, for which sult may be instituted in the Court of Claims within ninety days after the passage of this act by petition signed by the principal chief of said Sac and Fox Indians in Iowa, or by the attorney employed by the proper authorities of said Indians; the compensation to be paid to their said attorney by the Sac and Fox Indians of the Mississippi in Iowa, for his services and expenses rendered and to be rendered in the prosecution of said suit. The Attorney-General shall appear and defend in said suit, so far as the United States may be concerned. The Sac and Fox Indians in Oklahoma may appear, by counsel employed by their proper authorities, to defend on their behalf. Said suit, on motion of either of the parties thereto, shall be advanced on the dockets of either of the parties thereto, shall be advanced on the dockets of either of the covernment and printed as Congressional documents shall be received as evidence in said suit, so far as the facts therein may be concerned, and shall be given such weight as the court may determine for them.

The SPEAKER. Is t

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like the gentleman from Iowa to give some explanation in regard to this bill.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, at the first session of this Congress a bill was passed adjudicating and adjusting the claims between these two branches of the Sac and Fox tribe, one branch being in Iowa and the other in Oklahoma and Kansas. The President vetoed that bill. The bill was referred then to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The President promised to have the matter thoroughly investigated during the recess since the last session of this House and promised to report upon it to the House. This has been done.

His opinion and that of the Department was that this matter ought to go to the Court of Claims instead of Congress adjudicating it, and therefore a Senate bill has been passed simply referring the whole controversy between these two sections of the tribe, or bands of the tribe, to the Court of Claims, in accordance with the views of the Department of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the President. So far as the committee was concerned, they thought they had ample evidence upon which to finally dispose of the matter in the Congress; but they have yielded, however, to the suggestion of the Department, and they present the bill in this form.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table. Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, after the lucid explanation of the gentleman from Iowa I withdraw my objection. [Laughter.] CONSIDERATION OF THE SHIP-SUBSIDY BILL.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania submits the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to which was referred the resolution of the House No. 877, have had the same under consideration and herewith report the following in lieu thereof:

"Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this order and on each day hereafter until and including Friday of this week, at such time as the House shall not be considering general appropriation bills, conference reports, or motions to suspend the rules, the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 529) to promote the national defense, to create a naval reserve, to establish American ocean mail lines to foreign markets, and to promote commerce; and after five hours of general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, the substitute amendment reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule; and on Friday, March 1, at 3 o'clock, unless consideration shall have been sooner concluded, the Committee of the Whole shall rise and report the bill, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the amendment in the nature of a substitute and on any pending amendment thereto and on the bill to a final passage: Provided, That at any time, by direction of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, the committee shall rise to consider in the House general appropriation bills, conference reports, and motions to suspend the rules: And provided further, That at the conclusion of the consideration of the aforesaid matters the Committee of the Whole shall resume its sitting on direction of the Speaker.

"General leave to print shall be granted for ten days on the bill, said ten days to run from the adoption of this order."

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I voted "no." I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois and withdraw my vote, and would like to answer "present."

The name of Mr. Humphreys of Mississippi was called, and he voted "present."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Mississippi is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to provide for the consideration of what is popularly known as the "ship-subsidy bill." During the last session of Congress the Senate passed an act "to promote the national defense, to create a naval reserve, to establish American ocean mail lines to foreign markets, and to promote commerce."

Without stopping to undertake in detail to describe that act. it is sufficient to say that it provided for a naval reserve; it provided for ship subsidies for American steam vessels and subsidies for American sailing vessels, to be measured by the amount of their cargo, and also for the carriage of the mails. This bill in the House was referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and that committee reported a sub-It struck out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and in lieu thereof substituted an amendment to an act passed March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce." This act is very short, very simple, and very easily understood. It provides that the Postmaster-General shall be authorized and directed to enter into contracts for a term of ten years with citizens of the United States for the carrying of mails on steamships hereafter built in the United States and registered in the United States, or now duly registered by a citizen or citizens of the United States, and provides the amount to be paid for the carriage of mails under these contracts to be entered into by the Postmaster-General between certain ports. First, from a port on the Atlantic coast to South America in steamships capable of going at a certain rate of speed, and their compensation to be measured by the number of their trips; second, from ports of the Gulf to the Isthmus of Panama; third, from ports on the Pacific coast to Panama and South American ports; fourth, from ports on the Pacific coast also by way of Hawaii to China and Japan, and from ports on the Pacific coast also to the Orient and Australasia.

A provision for a naval reserve in a modified form is also included in the House substitute.

The proposition pending is that upon its adoption the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the House substitute. Five hours are provided for general debate. Upon the conclusion of the general debate the House substitute is to be read for amendment under the five-minute rule, and at 3 o'clock on Friday next the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is to rise and report the bill as amended with any pending amendment. The previous question is then to be considered as ordered on the bill and amendment to final passage. Leave is granted for ten days to print on the bill, the ten days to commence from the adoption of this resolution.

The House will observe that the proposition is simply to give an opportunity to consider this measure, open to amendment, to fix the time of general debate, and fix the time for a vote.

I reserve the balance of my time. Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, there was a time when you yourself waxed eloquent and earnest in opposition to legislation like this. You were in those days "a Samson in conflict and a Solomon in counsel." To-day Samson is shorn of his locks and Solomon hath grown fond. [Applause on the Democratic Mr. Speaker, the whole essence of Democracy is in opposition to this bill and to this class of legislation. It is needless for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to tell us how far short in iniquity this substitute is of the Senate bill. We all know that this substitute is but the vehicle upon which the subject-matter shall be carried to conference, so that out of conference there shall come the bill which is desired by the special interests back of the agitation for a bill. The whole essence of Democracy is in opposition to this bill, because all the law and all the gospel of American Democracy is in Thomas Jefferson's first inaugural address, and that boiled down in one sentence, giving the true definition of all Democracy, is this "Equal governmental opportunities and equal governmental burdens for all, special privileges and special rebates for none." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Why, this is worse than the tariff itself, because this is class legislation, stark mad and naked. It is said that hypocrisy is the reverence which vice pays to virtue. The tariff pays a reverence to revenue needs upon its face, at any rate, and though it goes into the business of hothousing one man or one industry at the expense of others, it at least professes a different end. This bill professes nothing but the naked class purpose which lies in it, to hothouse the shipowning and the ship-building industry of this country at the expense of the balance of its citizenship. There is no pretense that it has a revenue purpose, no pretense that it has any right purpose, but it is bare, naked, unveiled, and unblushing class legislation. [Applause on Democratic side.] When you ask its advocates why it should be, they tell us that shipbuilding is a great American industry; that there is something sacred and patriotic about an American merchant marine. My friends, if there be, then let them go about getting an American merchant marine right now, not by special class legislation, but by giving equal opportunity to American citizens with all the balance of the world to buy ships and ship material in the cheapest market. You can build up an American merchant marine in twelve months if you will do it by repealing the class legislation which you already have, rather than by enacting still more class legisla-Admittedly, but for your prohibitive laws America would have ships for ocean carrying trade.

My friends, this is bare, naked, unveiled, without pretense, simply the taking by government that ought equally to guard all out of one pocket to put into the pocket of another. A great American industry! Why is it any more respectable or any more American than cotton raising or wheat raising or potato growing? What reason is there under the sun why the American citizen should be taxed in order that a shipowner may make more profit or a shipbuilder may make more profit more than there is why he should be taxed in order that a cotton planter may have money to put into his pocket as a largess directly out of the Treasury to make his industry more profitable? What is, after all, the greatest American industry, Mr. Speaker? It is labor. One hundred thousand times rather would I vote for a bill to tax every American citizen in order to give a better wage to the woman in the sweat shop in New York, Philadelphia, or Boston than to vote for this. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In that event it would be taking from the rich in order to give to the poor. It would still be robbery and un-American. In this case it is not only robbery, but cruelty, because it takes from the poor in order to give to the already rich. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Need protection! There are few more prosperous industries to-day than shipbuilding. Need protection! Already the most entirely protected industry in America, it is the only industry that is by law given an absolute monopoly to a large extent. give it an absolute monopoly of all the shipbuilders and carrying business upon the lakes, the rivers, and the seacoasts. It is the same old story of greasing the fat goose. The whole world seems to be bent upon greasing the fat goose, never the lean goose, because it is the fat goose that has the influence. It is the fat goose that can contribute to campaign funds. It is the already rich, the already strong, the already influential that can knock at governmental doors and obtain further advantage. The only difference in God's world between this and voting money directly out of the Treasury for the poor woman in a sweat shop is that while in the sight of God and man both are taking without consent from one for another and un-American, the latter to a certain extent is charity, at any rate. This is not even charity, because the recipient of it does not bear himself like a beggar. He bears himself like a master-like one who demands things and is in the habit of getting them, and who holds above Representatives in certain parts of this country a sword threatening to cut their political throats unless they pass class legislation for his enrichment. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The robbery goes on from whom to whom? From all to Harriman, with one line of steamships upon the Pacific coast—a good Republican, I believe—and Hill with another line upon the Pacific coast—a good Democrat, I believe—so that in saying this I am at least nonpartisan. They differ in politics, but they agree in millionairedom. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining? I have promised to yield some time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used nine minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will consume the other minute, Mr. Speaker, in saying that I was so unfortunate as to miss your attention at the beginning, and I wish to repeat that earlier you were in opposition to this sort of legislation. I wish with all my soul that you were the same Samson in fight and the same Solomon in counsel that you were when you made that magnificent speech in opposition to ship subsidy which I would have read instead of my own remarks this evening if I could have laid my hands upon it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I will ask gentlemen on the other side to use some of their time.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the adoption of this rule and I am in favor of the passage of this bill. In 1891 we passed through the House of Representatives, and it became a law, a bill providing for the carrying of mails in American bottoms. We had from the other side of the Chamber the same howl about subsidy, the same howl about robbery, that we hear to-day, and yet we put that act upon the statute book, and as a result of it when we had the Spanish-American there were put at the service of the Government four splendid fast ships that were greatly needed, and every true American citizen regretted that we did not have twenty of them. And from the time that bill went into operation and our interests felt the effect of it in the transportation of goods and of passengers between this country and Europe, there has not been a word of criticism from any part of the United States.

Now we are extending that; we are looking toward the South American trade; we are looking toward the trade of the Orient; we want fast American ships flying the American flag and carrying the mail regularly between the ports of the United States

South America and the ports of the Orient.

We have a bill here that carries something over $3,000,000 a year. Why, we are making $3,000,000 a year from the postage paid on the mail carried in the present line of American ships, and no cry of robbery will frighten the representatives of the American people.

Mr. GROSVENOR. We are making clear nearly a million and a half dollars per annum.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Ohio has the figures, but The cry of the gentleman from will not go into the details. Mississippi [Mr. Williams] about robbery is not unfamiliar to this House. Time and again he has denounced our present tariff as an act of robbery upon the American people, and still the American people under it have marched right on to the most magnificent prosperity that the country ever dreamed of. [Applause on the Republican side.] His cry of robbery and his cry of subsidy will not frighten us. Have we not seen that side of the House walk right up and vote year after year for a subsidy pure and simple for carrying the mails through the Southern States? [Applause on the Republican side.] Oh, it is subsidy when it benefits the whole country, but it isn't subsidy when it benefits our section! [Laughter and applause on the Re-

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PAYNE. I have only five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. All right.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding this cry, notwithstanding the epithets that they try to put into the place of argument, I trust that we will pass this bill, and that the same magnificent results may flow out of it that have flowed out of a similar bill on a smaller scale on one American line between this country and Europe. [Applause on the Republican side.]
Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I re-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eleven minutes remain-

Mr. DALZELL. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is the gentleman going to conclude in one speech?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes. Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, before I yield I want to say that my withers are unwrung so far as the criticisms by the gentleman from New York. Never at any time in my political existence did I vote for the Southern Railway mail subsidy, nor have I ever voted for any species of special privilege or class legislation. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, there are two ways of helping to promote an industry. One is to make the conditions under which it must exist helpful to it, and the other is to pay its The Republican party proposes to help the merchant marine not by making conditions better for it, not by creating conditions under which American enterprise, free and intelligent, can of its own initiative succeed as against the rest of the world, but it proposes to pauperize a certain portion of it by making it the beneficiary of a direct contribution from the Public Treasury. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is an absolute deception to talk of this bill as being a bill for the purpose of creating better mail facilities. It may be that that farce will last in the Committee of the Whole for some time, but it did not last among the students of the bill in the committee having it in charge.

There we recognized and knew that the purpose was not simply to provide better mail facilities, but to grant subsidies to particular lines of steamships. Gentlemen, the real question of how to create an American merchant marine is one of the most difficult and far-reaching questions that can engage any man's mind. It ramifies into many fields and is as broad in its scope as the tariff or any other great problem. Yet this House is to be called upon to act upon this far-reaching matter in these closing days of the session. If any Democrat were to suggest that the Committee on Rules should bring in a rule permitting debate for five hours upon tariff legislation and then upon a certain date to put it to a vote, we would be told that it was absurd to undertake a great question of that kind in that way

Massachusetts is to-day being told that it is absurd to consider the question of tariff now when there is no opportunity to give it proper study. Yet the Republican Members of this House ask of us that we shall consider this equally great question in five hours, and if we have five hours of general debate in the House, it will be at least four hours more than the bill has ever had heretofore. It seems very curious that it is necessary for quick and sudden moves by the advocates of ship subsidy in order for them to make headway. The committee had the Senate bill under consideration for many weeks, all through the long session and most of the short session. All of a sudden, in the twinkling of the eye, there comes a conversion, more sudden than ever happened to Saul on the road to Damascus, a conversion of the powers that be, and equally quick there comes a change in the personnel of the committee. Then all honor is given to the new member of the committee. He brings forward already prepared this bill, and the committee immediately, without further consideration, present it to the House. Days go by, weeks go by, no rule comes in, and now at the eleventh hour we are asked to consider, without any proper deliberation, this measure and to pass it. If we could look into the hearts and consciences of men who vote for this rule, it would be found that not anything like a majority of the other side favor the rule or favor this bill, but they are being forced into acquiescence. being forced to yield; they are being told, the men who may not favor it, who vote for the rule, that the bill will not become a law, that the Senate will not pass it. And then the men who do favor subsidy, but who do not think the bill gives enough of it, are told, "Oh, well, leave that to conference." So the leaders play both ends against the middle in this eleventh hour to pass through this vicious rule. [Applause.] Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of ship subsidy and have been even since I have been a Member of this House, but I am opposed to this measure. I voted for it in the committee, because my vote was the deciding vote. A negative vote would have killed the bill in the committee. I voted to report the bill, with the understanding that when it got into the House it should receive a full and fair discussion; but two hours and a half on each side is not sufficient time to discuss the merits of this measure.

I am opposed to this measure for one reason particularly, and that is this: It is a mail subsidy providing a subsidy for ships of 16 knots speed or greater. It proposes to give $200,000 to the Oceanic Steamship Company, now under contract with this Government, carrying mail from San Francisco to Australia, which line received last year two hundred and ninety-odd thousand dollars subsidy, or $57,000 more than paid the entire cost of all the labor on all of their ships on that line. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, this bill, if it becomes a law, provides a subsidy, as I have said, for ships of 16 knots speed or greater, to the absolute exclusion of all other ships sailing the American flag on salt water, and there are over 500 of such ships to-day ready to take advantage of some equitable measure of this kind. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I again want to say that I would be in favor of subsidizing even mail lines under some reasonable plan to South America, but not to the Orient, where there were 170 shipments of mail last year.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Hinshaw].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I did not ask for any time to discuss this question, but since time has been yielded to me, I would say that I am opposed to this rule. I am opposed to bringing in here at this time in this session a bill of this importance, which in its present form has never properly been considered in any committee of this House. As has been said, I wish to repeat that the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries had under consideration for about a year and a half a cargo ship subsidy bill which came from the Senate of the United States. That bill differed radically from this bill, in my judgment. That bill would have tended in some measure to increase the merchant marine of this country.

This, in my judgment, will not do anything of the kind at all. If anything it will tend to decrease the shipping facilities that this country now possesses. Tell me what good it will do to the other vessels which this country seeks to run between this and other countries to have a few ships receive a large subsidy from this Government? Tell me what is the result of the subsidy, complimented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] between this country and Europe. How much did it increase our merchant marine between this and other countries? Tell me what merchant vessels now ply between our ports and foreign ports in consequence of the subsidy of this line between here and Liverpool. Not a single vessel has been given to our merchant marine by that subsidy. The vessels that get a bonus from this country themselves carry merchandise to no great extent, and, as the distinguished gentleman now in my eye [Mr. LITTAUER] said to me, the payment of that subsidy to those vessels is purely a bonus, purely a gift, and has not resulted in the increase of our commerce in the last fifteen years one single particle. And this bill, in my judgment, will not be of any material advantage to American commerce. There are a thousand reasons, it seems to me, why this is not an adequate proposition. If I had my way, and I do not expect to get it, I would say that the old system of discriminating tonnage dues worked admirably in days gone by and will probably do more for the merchant marine than any other measure that could be proposed. Talk about this being a Republican measure! It is not distinctively a Republican measure any more than a measure for discriminating tonnage taxes would be. Our platform, I will call your attention to the fact, has declared in favor of no specific kind of ship subsidy, but only that the merchant marine should be rehabilitated by means of some adequate measure, and this, in my judgment, is not such a measure. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, how much more time have we on this side?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time is exhausted.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to throw myself on the mercy of the House for a moment. In the confusion I made a miscalculation of the time yielded by me, and I would like to ask unanimous consent that each side may have five minutes longer so I may yield five minutes which I ought to yield and expected to yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for an extension of time for five minutes on each side. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE Armond].

[Applause.]

ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, a legislative outrage Mr. DE which is now about to be perpetrated upon the House and the country has been hatching for years. The culmination now reached is the product of years and years of scheming, planning, and lobbying. A few minutes is entirely insufficient time in which to denounce it.

The lesson which this outrage teaches is one we are taught at a high price, but if we learn the lesson well perhaps it may be worth all that it costs. The lesson is that here the millionaire can have his way, and here the poor do not have a chance. [Applause on the Democratic side.] A labor bill was reported and is left to die upon the Calendar, because only plain men from the ranks of plain American citizenship, in the interest of fair play, demanded its passage, while as to this measure millions are behind it; millionaires pushing it, and convenient and conciliatory statesmen after long pretending to stand against it yield, and now it comes.

Subsidy! "Popularly called a 'subsidy measure,'" says the gentleman from Pennsylvania; unpopularly called a "subsidy measure." [Applause on the Democratic side.] The name is one that ought to stick in the American throat! The odor of it ought to be a stench in American nostrils! Subsidy for the powerful, who need it not, at the expense of the poor and weak, who can not afford to contribute the subsidy! Subsidy out of the toil and earnings and savings, out of the sweat and sacrifice of the humble-for the mighty!

We need an American merchant marine, do we? Yet we do not have the opportunity to buy it or to buy any of it. We need American ships to carry our flag to the distant parts of the earth, but every American citizen is denied the opportunity to buy a single ship and fly over it his country's flag. Why? They say we can not buy them and man them and run them. If that be true, why not forestall and foreclose the argument by giving opportunity to buy them? It is not true, and it is known not to be true, and that is the reason the opportunity is not given.

Now, here, with business pressing, with important measures to die upon the Calendar, with the masses of the American people throttled and without opportunity even to express their opinion through their representatives, all the spare time of the closing days of this session is to be given to this infamy. You have been dragooned into the doing of what for a time you resisted. You have surrendered what you pretend to believe in. You have turned against what you professed and advocated; and why have you done it, and what is to come from it? You have surrendered to a class. You have fallen at the feet of the powerful. You have sacrificed the weak, and you are about to do what out of your own mouths you have long condemned. You are about to do that which, according to your own philosophy, time and time again proclaimed in this him who is now the Speaker and by others, is going to perpetrate upon the American people, upon the poor and the helpless, in the interest of the rich and the strong, an infamy, as you yourselves denounced it, as you yourselves characterized it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Grosvenor]. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, whenever the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] loses his temper and begins to talk about the crushing out of the poor, I always know that he is treading on thin ice in his own estimation. The gentleman from Nebraska

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. De Armond]?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will be delighted.
Mr. DE ARMOND. Does the gentleman mean to understand that he who dares raise his voice here for the poor is on thin ice in this House?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I began life a poorer man than the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. De Armond], and I am a poorer man to-day than he is, and I have never failed to vote upon every question that has arisen for the benefit of the poor of my country. I challenge investigation.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Will the gentleman permit me ask him another question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not think the gentleman ought to take my time.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I want to ask the gentleman whether he would consent to an amendment to this rule permitting the consideration of a labor bill also? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Hin-SHAW] proposes as a remedy that we enter upon a system of discriminating duties. The first step would be to abrogate about forty-seven commercial treaties under which the most magnificent foreign commerce this country ever saw is being carried on and turn this country over to the chances of making forty-seven new commercial treaties under the condition of things in this country. We should invite chaos and business

Mr. HINSHAW. Is it not a fact that in the Senate bill originally introduced by Senator Gallinger the principle of discriminating tonnage duties was not included?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It may have been suggested many years Mr. GROSVENOR. It may have been suggested many years ago. And the greatest lawyer upon the topic in the United States wrote an opinion, which I have in my desk, saying that it was unconstitutional in the first place, and, in the second place, would destroy our foreign commerce in this indirect way.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will not yield my speech to the gen-

Mr. HINSHAW. I just wanted to ask him if it was not true

if Senator Gallinger before our committee

Mr. GROSVENOR. I care not for what Senator Gallinger may have said. He is not a lawyer. But I do know he does not favor such a scheme. Everybody in this country who can read and write, and represent something besides cornfields, knows our foreign trade hangs to-day upon the perfection of our systems of commercial treaties with foreign countries. Mr. JAMES. The men who labor in the cornfields have to help pay this subsidy.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not a cent. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. James] must address the Speaker, if he desires to interrupt the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], the leader of the minority of the House, has raised the cry of partisanship, and says that it is an anti-Democratic measure and a broad Republican measure, because it is a measure in favor, as we say, of building up the merchant marine, and indirectly and directly building up our foreign commerce.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if it is a Republican measure, it is a measure recommended to Congress many years ago by President Tyler. It is in almost the identical language of the recommendation of President Polk, who, I think, was a pretty good Democrat in his day.* It is in the language of the leading statesmen of the South whose names I have before me, extracts from whose speeches I will read when the time comes. It was a Democratic measure from the foundation of the system down until the adoption of the law of 1891, and every Democratic President of the United States who has ever spoken upon the subject has advocated this measure, and their recommendation is carried in this bill.

So when you come to talk about the Democratic position, you are in the same trouble that you are in all the time—trying to be Democrats and belonging to the Democratic party at the [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi says that the bill, if it should pass the House, will go to the Senate and be loaded with a cargo or subsidy bill and come back and be agreed to in this House. Now, I do not want to say that the gentleman has contracted doubts of the integrity of everybody else by any course of life of his own; and yet it is always, I believe, suggestive when a man stands up and impugns the integrity of anybody else who happens to be on the opposite

If this House appoints a committee of conference—and I want every man within the sound of my voice to hear what I say—doubtless I will be one of the members, and my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. Minor] here will doubtless be another. for myself, and if I am not properly representing him, let him say so now. No bill that materially changes this bill either in the principle of the application of remedy or in any material increase in amount of compensation for the extension of these lines will be ever agreed to by a committee of conference of which I am a member; and I believe that my record will justify the House of Representatives in taking my word for that. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]. So much for that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. SULZER. If that bill should become law, how much will it take out of the Treasury of the United States every year?

Mr. GROSVENOR, Not a single dollar. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Therefore I am glad to have that truth brought out. shown—and the figures will be presented here—that already we are receiving back again for foreign-mail pay to-day more money, by a large sum, as the gentleman from New York stated, than we are paying out, and this proposition would only add to the profits of the Government in that direction. We are getting all the money now we are paying out, and we will certainly get a great deal more if we do a great deal more foreign-This whole cry of taking money from the poor and giving it to the rich is just so much nonsense, and every intelligent man knows it that has looked into the subject.

Now, what is this? It is not a subsidy in any sense of the word. Let us see what we have been doing here. Let me look across the Hall at the Democratic Members, for whom I have the highest respect. They have voted for fifteen years, always practically unanimously, to give a great line of railroad a subsidy, sometimes of over $200,000 a year and at other times $140,000 and $180,000 a year. For what? Not for going into any new territory, not for going anywhere, except to agree to run their trains a little faster. Now, what is there in this bill? You must not only run your ship up to 16 knots an hour, but you must have a time for starting; you must have a time for getting there, and you must run regularly into the countries that the contracts call for. Why, it is a mere amendment of the bill which I believe practically the whole Democratic party in this House voted for, the act of March, 1891. At all events, the act of 1891 was passed, and went upon the statute books, and has worked well ever since, and no Democrat ever yet introduced a bill to repeal it. It was in operation during the Democratic Administration from 1892 to 1896, and it was executed by Postmaster-Generals with the highest success to the country, and no effort was made for its repeal.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not like to call this a Republican measure, although it is true that the three last Republican Presidents of the United States have advocated this measure; first, Harrison in three different messages; second, McKinley in three messages and in his last speech on earth. Then comes the present Administration, and not only does he recommend aid to the merchant marine, but he singles out this particular bill and asks the Republicans, in vindication of Republican platforms, to vote for this bill. I know it is fashionable sometimes to go on the country stump and elect somebody to Congress because he is going to "stand by Roosevelt." I think we will I think we will cause he is going to "stand by Rooseveit." I think we will have an opportunity to go into some districts and point out something upon that topic some of these times. We will ascertain who it is that fights all the bills the President asks us to

So now it is said by the gentleman from Kentucky Sherley] that we have not time to consider this bill. measure gives five hours of general debate, and it gives until next Friday at 3 o'clock in the afternoon for debate under the five-minute rule, with liberal privilege of printing, which may be begun to-morrow morning, if the Members desire to have it. Mr. Speaker, the Republican party owes it to the country that this measure of limited cooperation shall be enacted. I wish to stop right here and say that the charge that this bill is to give contracts or subsidies to anybody is an idle slander. a slander so cruel, so outrageous, that every honest American who understands it will resent it. There is not one ship on the Pacific coast, except those belonging to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, that can now carry this contract. Not only have I the fullest sympathy with the 16 knots an hour proposition; but it is proposed by the gentleman from Iowa to so amend the bill that the man who will bid for the highest speed shall have the contract. There is not a single ship upon the Pacific Ocean except those I have named that can carry these contracts.

Some man has been going about the Houses of Congress here telling people that this bill will not produce the building of a single ship. Let me tell you that these contracts can not be carried until there is proof that there are at least twenty-seven new ships, built absolutely new from the ground up and approved by the Navy Department, capable of traveling 16 knots per hour in continuous service, ships built in American yards and manned by American sailors; which absolutely drives out every ship except a few of the Harriman line. There is not one ship of the Hill line that can carry this contract. There is not a ship of that line that can go 16 knots an hour consecutively under any pressure that can be brought to bear upon it. So what do we propose? We propose simply to extend our mail service down into the South American traffic and over into the oriental traffic. This is not based upon a tonnage subsidy, but based upon the principle of sending commercial lines where they do not now go. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HIN-SHAW] says that those ships that we are subsidizing, carrying the mail from Atlantic ports to Europe, do not carry any freight.

That is what I understood the gentleman to say.

Mr. HINSHAW. I said this did not increase their freight.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will show you that they have increased tenfold the exportation of American goods in American bot-

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker— Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, another thing-The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I must answer another proposition first, and then I will yield. The gentleman from Mississippi said we could build ships in this country as cheaply as anywhere else if we would take off the tariff from the materials entering into the construction of them. Does not the gentleman know that for many years, and especially under the Dingley Act, every item of material that enters into the building of a ship comes into this country free of duty?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is not what the gentleman from Mississippi said.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. To which gentleman does the gentleman from Ohio vield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I was told that was the statement made by the gentleman. At all events it is the statement—said was that if you would take down the bars and remove special privileges by letting people buy their ships and ship materials wherever they could buy them cheapest, that you would have an American merchant marine in twelve months.
Mr. WILLIAMS. No; what the gentleman from Mississippi

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is the same thing, and the gentle-man is trying to get out of it through a very small crevice. I want to state distinctly, before I recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt], that every dollar's worth, every pound, every foot of material that goes into a ship in an American shipyard for the foreign trade comes into this country free of duty.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

All the time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the

REPRINT OF REPORTS ON SHIP-SUBSIDY BILL.

Mr. Sherley, by unanimous consent, was granted leave for a reprint of the views of the minority of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries on the bill S. 529 (the shipsubsidy bill).

Mr. Grosvenor, by unanimous consent, was granted leave for a reprint of the report of the majority on the bill S. 529 (the ship-subsidy bill).

METROPOLITAN POLICE OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair takes from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 25630) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901," approved June 8, 1906, the reading of the engrossed copy of which was demanded. This is the engrossed bill. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was passed. On motion of Mr. Campbell of Kansas, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SALMON HATCHERIES IN ALASKA.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24755) to encourage private salmon hatcheries in Alaska, which send to the desk and ask to have read. .

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That salmon hatcheries are permitted to be constructed, owned, maintained, and operated on private premises, or on any of the unappropriated public lands and waters of Alaska, by citizens of the United States and corporations organized under any act of Congress or under the laws of any State or Territory of the United States, subject to the following restrictions and conditions: No salmon hatchery shall be located by public authority or by any private interest on any stream or its tributary or headwater lake, either of which has previously been occupied in good faith by any other person, firm, or corporation with a salmon hatchery that annually produces 10,000,000 or more Red (and or) King salmon fry, and no private hatchery shall hereafter be located on any unoccupied stream, its tributary, or headwater lake without the permission of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

SEC. 2. That there shall be granted from the public domain to eyery owner of a private salmon hatchery with an annual capacity of 10,000,000 or more Red (and or) King salmon fry an appropriate hatchery site not exceeding 40 acres of nonmineral land, together with the use of the adjacent tide lands and appurtenances, and all necessary fresh and salt waters, casements for roads and ways of ingress and egress, pipe lines, flumes, and conduits for conducting water, and the right to take and use any timber, stones, or other material from any public lands for the construction, use, and maintenance of said hatchery.

SEC. 3. That destruction of a hatchery by the elements or inevitable accident shall not deprive the owner of the exclusive right to the hatchery premises and appurtenances, provided such hatchery is substantially rebuilt on the same stream, its tributary or lake, within two years from the time of its destruction.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

With the following amendments:

With the following amendments:

Line 8, page 1, after "United States," strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 9, 10, 11, and 12, on page 1, and lines 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, on page 2.

Line 15, page 2, after "lands," insert "necessary."

Strike out all of section 4.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman explain this bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to grant fish hatcheries 40 acres of public land in Alaska for the purpose of fish hatcheries where they comply with certain requirements—that is, where they release 10,000,000 or more fry each year. It gives them no right of fishing. It does not give them any of the tide land. It simply gives them the fresh-water rights and easements and roads over the ground so as to operate.

Mr. TAWNEY. What part of Alaska is this in?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Any part of it. It is general law

Mr. TAWNEY.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is this for a new hatchery? Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. For any hatchery. a general law providing that any company that will establish a hatchery which will turn out 10,000,000 or more red or king salmon each year may have a free site of 40 acres.

Mr. GILLETT. This is for private hatcheries.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; for the benefit of private hatcheries.

Mr. TAWNEY. The only thing involved is the giving of the 40 acres of land?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Upon condition that these fish are turned

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; and there is the condition that if they are not turned out the land shall revert to the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to. Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I offer some amendments, in accordance with the suggestions of the Fish Commissioner, which further limits the grant.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 10 strike out the words "the adjacent tide." In line 11 strike out the words "lands and appurtenances and" and and salt."

In line 12 change the word "waters" to "water."
In line 20, after the word "rebuilt." add "and operated."
After the word "rebuilt." add "and operated."
After the word "destruction," in line 22, add:
"Sec. 4. That whenever a hatchery site ceases to be used for the specific purpose herein provided for, or whenever the hatchery situated thereon shall fail to liberate upon an average for any period of four years 10,000,000 or more red and (or) king salmon fry per year, it shall, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, revert to the public domain.

"Sec. 5. That nothing in this act shall be construed to grant fishing privileges in the waters contiguous to or within the hatchery sites; and all fish-cultural operations conducted under this act shall be in conformity with the provisions of the act approved June 26, 1906. entitled 'An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska.'

Alaska."
"Sec. 6. Congress expressly reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act without the payment of any damages for any injury to any rights that may be acquired by virtue of this act."

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Humphrey of Washington, the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below

8, 8510. An act to amend an act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents to the Committee on Printing.

S. 8426. An act authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and adjudicate the claims of Samuel Garland, deceased, against the Choctaw Nation—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 25758) 'amending an act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," and for other purposes

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, and he is hereby directed, in constructing the public buildings authorized under the provisions of the act approved June 30, 1906, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," to provide quarters, so far as may be practicable, for all the branches of the Government service in the town or city where such building or buildings are to be erected: Provided, That any and all changes or alterations made under the foregoing authority shall be made within the limit of cost heretofore fixed by law for the construction of such buildings.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to expend from the appropriation heretofore made for the United States post-office building at Clarinda, Iowa, not to exceed the sum of $5,000 for the purpose of securing a suitable site for said building.

SEC. 3. That the authorization of $75,000 made for the erection of a United States post-office building at Lancaster, Ohio, is hereby transferred from section 7 to section 8 of the act approved June 30, 1906.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to expend from the appropriation heretofore made for the purpose of erecting a United States post-office and courthouse building at Ocala, Fla., not to exceed the sum of $5,000 for the enlargement of the site of said building.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to expend from the appropriation heretofore made for the United States post-office building at Owosso, Mich., not to exceed the sum of $1,500 for the purpose of enlarging the site of said building.

That the first and second provisos of section 1 of the act of

SEC. 6. That the first and second provisos of section 1 of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1858, entitled "An act to authorize the vestry of Washington parish to take and inclose certain parts of streets in the city of Washington for the purpose of extending the Washington Cemetery, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, repealed

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept a building which is now used and occupied for post-office purposes in the city of Perry, Okla.; and the said building and ground upon which said building is erected are hereby declared to be under the exclusive jurisdiction and in the custody and control of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be used and occupied for a post-office in said city.

SEC. 8. That the Commission to investigate the postal situation in New York, N. Y., created under the provisions of section 17 of the act approved June 30, 1906, consisting of the Postmaster-General, the present chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the United States House of Representatives, be, and the same is hereby, authorized and directed to report the result of such investigation to be made, together with suitable recommendations, to the first session of the Sixtieth Congress. And for the expense of said Commission the amount herefore appropriated shall be available, to be expended on vouchers approved by the chairman of said commission.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept from the park commissioners of the city of Des Moines, Iowa, as a donation, a strip of ground lying between the Des Moines River and the site purchased by the Government for the United States post-office building, said piece of ground being bounded on the west by First street, on the north by Walnut street, on the south by Court avenue, and on the east by the Des Moines River.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to acquire by gift or donation such additional land as he may deem necessary for the enlargement of the Federal building site heretofore acquired at Mason City, Iowa.

Sec. 12. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to sell at public or private sale, for cash, and for not less than $15,000, the building or buildings on the easterly 20 feet of lot 2 and the westerly 22 feet of lot 3, in block 25, of the city of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, being the 42 feet next adjacent to the present site of the post-office and court-house building on Second avenue, in said city, together with the easterly 12 feet of said 42 feet, and to give to the purchaser or purchasers of said land a quit-claim deed thereto: Provided, That the net proceeds of such sale shall be credited to the appropriation made by act of Congress approved June 30, 1906, for the acquisition of additional land and the extension of said building.

Sec. 13. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey to the purchaser from the United States of square 1131, and the south part of square 1117, and the squares south of squares 1123, 1148, and 1149, in the city of Washington, all the interest of the United States in the land lying south of the squares so purchased and between them and the channel of the Anacostia River, upon the payment by such purchaser into the Treasury of the United States of such sum of money as the said Secretary of War, upon consideration of all the circumstances, shall determine proper to be paid for the said land; and the surveyor of the District of Columbia is hereby authorized and directed to mark out such land and determine the acres and to record a plat thereof.

Sec. 14. That so much of section 3 of the act of Congress approved June 30, 1906, as authorized the Secretary of the Treasury, within the total limit of

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second—— Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second and ask that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to have an explanation of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands a second and asks unanimous consent that the second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Missouri is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from New York to twenty minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this bill merely corrects a Mr. BARTHOLDT. number of errors which occurred in the legislation had at the last session. It makes no appropriation, and all the changes provided for in this bill are to be made within the limits of cost heretofore fixed.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me?
Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the object of the bill?
Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will explain it to the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to ask the gentleman if there are any new constructions authorized in this bill?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. There is not one dollar's worth of new construction, nor is there a foot of ground authorized, but in some cases it was necessary to transfer from the appropriation made for the building to the appropriation made for the site because an additional small amount was necessary to procure the site which the people wanted.

Mr. MANN. Is the total cost of building and site in any case increased?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Not in one single instance.
Mr. TAWNEY. I want to ask the gentleman another ques-The first section of the bill is entirely new legislation. Now, do you apply it-I did not catch it as it was read-to the act passed June 20, 1906? It does not extend the authority of the Secretary over buildings hereafter to be constructed?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No, sir; it applies merely to the legislation of last session.

Mr. TAWNEY. What changes this bill would authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to make in buildings now authorized must be made within the limits of cost fixed by the act of June 30, 1906.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Exactly: the gentleman states it correctly.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman specifically mention the buildings which this affects?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It will take about twenty minutes to read all the changes.

Mr. CANDLER. I think it is necessary.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In further explanation, I want to say that the Attorney-General has recently rendered an opinion that where the Congress has appropriated for a specific building and it should become necessary to locate in that building a room, for instance, for the customs service or internal-revenue service or Weather Bureau, or whatever the service may be, such a change can not be made unless we pass this legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, if the gentleman from Missouri will pardon me, I understand that as the law now is, if a certain amount of money is appropriated for a site, and a certain amount for building, and the site can be gotten cheaper or the site will cost more, thereby necessitating a difference in the proportion of the expenditure for the two things, that difference can not be met, and this bill will enable it to be met?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is it; exactly.
Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand, furthermore, if the building is for a post-office, for example, and it is desired to hold court in the building, without some such legislation as this that could not be done?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It does not apply to courts. If Congress should authorize the holding of a court in a certain place where it had not been heretofore authorized, the amount heretofore fixed would not be sufficient to enable the Treasury Department to make a court-house out of it. So it does not apply to those

Mr. CANDLER. Does it apply to the general appropriations for the post-office buildings throughout the country?

Mr. TAWNEY. Only those authorized by the act of June 30,

Mr. CANDLER. Is there anything in it with reference to Columbus, Miss.?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No, sir. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair, twothirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed:

DESERT LANDS IN COLORADO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a resolution from the Senate of the United States; which was read, as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 24134) providing for the granting and patenting to the State of Colorado desert lands formerly in the Southern Ute Indian Reservation, in Colorado.

passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 6498) to amend an act entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon United States commissioners over offenses committed in a portion of the permanent Hot Springs Mountain Reservation, Ark.," approved April 20, 1904.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the substitute will be read in lieu of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That public act No. 124, an act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States commissioners over offenses committed in a portion of the permanent Hot Springs Mountain Reservation, Ark., be amended as follows:

amended as follows:
That section 6 be amended by prefixing the following:
"That any United States commissioner, duly appointed by the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Arkansas, and residing in said district, shall have power and jurisdiction to hear and act upon all complaints made of any and all violations of this act."
Sec. 2. That the words "commissioner," "such commissioner," "said commissioner," or "the commissioner," "whenever they occur in said act be stricken out and the words "either of said commissioners" be inserted in lieu thereof.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, there is a misprint in the bill. The word "either," in line 15, should be any," as shown by the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 15 strike out "either" and insert "any;" so as to read "any of said commissioners."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken: and the amendment was agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have an explanation of what the bill is for.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I will say, in answer to the gentleman's inquiry, that in 1904 this body of Congress passed an act accepting jurisdiction of the reservations there, and provided, among other things, for the punishment of offenses committed on that reservation. On appeal of the cases to the United States circuit court of appeals, that court held that the act was indefinite in that it did not specify what commissioners should have jurisdiction of offenses, and the purpose of this legislation is to define the jurisdiction of any commissioner in that district court residing in the district.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the bill favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes, sir; and is unanimously approved—that is, the object of it—by both the Department of Justice and the Department of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Robinson of Arkansas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. Bannon, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of H. R. 12105, for the relief of Thomas Ross, Fifty-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. Rodenberg, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for two days, on account of illness.

BRIDGE ACROSS GRAND CALUMET RIVER, ILLINOIS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for present consideration of the bill (H. R. 25671) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Grand Calumet River, State of Illinois, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct a railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Grand Calumet River at a point in the south half of the southwest quarter of fractional section 5, township 36 north, range 15 east of the third principal meridian, about one half mile west of the boundary line between the States of Indiana and Illinois, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

APPRAISER OF MERCHANDISE FOR CUSTOMS DISTRICT OF PUGET SOUND.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill S. 7502.

The bill was read, as follows:

An act (S. 7502) providing for the appointment of an appraiser of mer-chandise for the customs collection district of Puget Sound, State of Washington.

Be it enacted, etc.. That there shall be in the customs collection district of Puget Sound, State of Washington, an appraiser of merchandise, whose principal office shall be located at Seattle, to be appointed by the President, and by and with the consent of the Senate, and with compensation at the rate of $3,000 per annum.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] Chair hears none.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I first offer an amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield to the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

After "per annum," in line 8, add the following:

"SEC. 2. That Seattle is hereby designated the port of entry for the customs collection district of Puget Sound, at which place the collector shall reside, and Port Townsend is constituted a subport of said district."

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, this is simply the proposition that three years ago the Committee on Ways and Means recommended.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order against the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the point of order. Mr. CUSHMAN. I think the amendment, if adopted, would equire an expenditure of money not authorized by law. Let me require an expenditure of money not authorized by law. Let me see the amendment, please—I only heard it indistinctly. [Amendment handed to Mr. Cushman.] Mr. Speaker, I do not insist on the point of order, but I do wish to be heard in opposition to the proposed amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. CUSHMAN. No; not by any means, Mr. Speaker. Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Three years ago the Committee on Ways and Means, by a unanimous vote, recommended this action. The port of entry for Puget Sound district is now at Port Townsend. The business of the district is at Seattle and The committee deemed it wise that the custom-house Tacoma. and port of entry should be where the business was, rather than to compel the business to hunt for the port of entry. and Tacoma are two magnificent cities on the great Puget Sound. Port Townsend has 3,000 population, while Seattle has a population of nearly 200,000. Ninety-seven per cent of the business of the Sound is done outside of Port Townsend. It is a travesty on good business methods to have Port Townsend continued as a port for that great body of water. It takes nearly two days more to secure communication with Washington to and from Port Townsend than to and from either Seattle or Tacoma, and 55 per cent of all the vessels on the Sound are owned in the magnificent city of Seattle.

Gentlemen, it is simply against common sense for these people to come in and ask for this additional annual expenditure of $3,000 for an appraiser's salary, when almost the entire work to be performed will be at Seattle. This officer will be needed there, and I favor the authorization coupled with the change of location. That is all there is of it. The two things should go together or the bill should be killed. This change was passed three years ago unanimously through the Ways and Means Committee, passed by the House of Representatives, sent over to the Senate, and held up. That is just the amendment I am offering again now.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Cushman].

Mr. Cushman. Mr. Speaker, this subject, raised by this proposed amendment, has been a bone of contention in the State of Washington for a good many years. But recently, through the efforts of all the members of the Washington State delega-tion in Congress, the old row has quieted down, and all the people of the State of Washington are content that the chief port of entry shall remain at Port Townsend, where it was located some twenty years ago. It is impossible for me in the few min-

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

k him one question:
Mr. CUSHMAN. Certainly.
Mr. CUSHMAN. Certainly.
Would it not personally and politically relieve you, and would not the whole State be relieved, by having this action taken without your knowing it?

Mr. CUSHMAN. No, sir; it would not. On the contrary, in addition to the other aggravating features of the matter, I would be openly charged with bad faith and political dishonesty in having permitted-for the responsibility would be placed on me this change to be made which the people of our State do not want. Years ago there was a political row on in the State of Washington. Indeed, many of the political rows we have had in my State revolved round the location of this chief port of entry, which for years has been located at the little city of Port Townsend. Every fellow who aspired to the United States Senate and didn't have brains enough to win in a straight fight would try to buy a few votes in the State legislature by promising some community that if elected by the votes of that community, he would tear the custom-house up by the roots and move it down to some new town, and thereby pay his political debts. This situation created all kinds of a row. First, it created a row with the good people of Port Townsend, who naturally objected to having their welfare and material interests tied to the tail of somebody's political kite. Then, it raised a row over the rest of the State, because the residents of every other seacoast city in our State said that if the custom-house was to be moved at all, it ought to be moved to their particular town. When the present delegation was elected to that we were not going to swap and trade around the custom-house for any purpose; that where it had been for twenty years, there it should stay. This course on our part met with the universal approval of all the people of that State of all sec-

-both in the House and the Senate-we all declared tions and all parties. I want to make it plain here that the people of the State of Washington-who are the people to be affected by this proposed amendment—are not asking for this proposed change. people of the State of Washington don't want it. The city of Seattle isn't asking for it. The city of Tacoma is not deof Seattle isn't asking for it. The city of Tacoma is not demanding it. The people of Port Townsend are protesting against this proposed change; but by the gratuitous efforts of the members of the Ways and Means Committee [laughter] we are about to have injected into us over our protest an element of discord, the echoes of which will be heard in that State for twenty years.

While I do not seek to argue this matter on political grounds, the truth about it is that the majority members on the Ways and Means Committee ought to hold up our hands in this matter in our effort to administer the affairs of that region without everlasting row and confusion.

In the year of 1889 the Territory of Washington was admitted as a State into the Union. At that time, by agreement and understanding among all our people, the various Federal and State officers were located at different points in the State. State capitol was located at one town and the State penitentiary at another and the normal schools at still other places. And this arrangement recognized the various Federal offices as belonging to the various communities where they had been located. As a part of this arrangement the city of Port Townsend became the chief port of entry of the Puget Sound collection district, which embraces the entire State of Washington. Now, it is true that Port Townsend, where the custom-house is now located, is not the largest city in that State. But it does not require population for a customs port. During the last twenty years that Port Townsend has been the chief port of entry in that district we have had twenty-five or more different towns in the State that were larger by far than Port Townsend. If population were the only requisite for Federal offices, the city of New York would have the headquarters of every office in this Republic. But why is Port Townsend a proper place for the chief port of entry of this customs district? I'll tell you why. Because it is located geographically at the opening of Puget Sound. It is the only city in the entire State of Washington past which every ship goes which either enters or leaves Puget Sound. It is the first port of importance that the vessels reach that come into Puget Sound, and it is the last port that they pass as they go out of Puget Sound. It is a natural port of entry. It is the port that has existed ever since our State came into the Union. The people of our State are not clamoring for this change, but if any change is to be made in this matter there is immediately a row raised as to what city the chief port should be moved to, if it is moved at all. For heaven's sake, can't you let us rest in peace!

By the amendment which he has offered the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill] proposes to take the headquarters of this customs district to Seattle. He does not say whether or not there is any other city in that State that might possibly be a good place to move it to. Please remember that I am not asking to have this port of entry moved from Port Townsend, the town where it now is, to the city of Tacoma, where I live. It might be a good thing for my town. But I don't propose to be a political cannibal and live off my neighbors. I protest at this late hour, and with but few Members here, against this effort to change the chief port of entry in my State. Neither one of our Senators—perhaps I ought not to speak of the body at the other end of the Capitol, but no public man from the State of Washington is asking that this change here proposed shall be made. I object to this purely gratuitous effort, coming from the gentlemen on the Ways and Means Committee, when nobody in our State wants it.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Will the gentleman pardon a question? He does not object at this hour to having this bill passed which appoints an appraiser at $3,000 a year?

Mr. CUSHMAN. I am not particular about that. We need it, and we would like to have it. But if we can't get here what we need without having tied to it what we are utterly opposed to, I for one am willing to take nothing. I object to having the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill] "hand me a lemon" at the same time that he claims to be doing me a favor. strenuously and seriously object to having tied onto this bill a provision which will raise a row in my State that I am anxious to avoid, and which you gentlemen—the leaders of our party ought to be just as anxious to avoid as I am. It is very late, and I will not talk longer on this subject, although there is much more that might be said. I might say, in closing, however, that the effort to tie this obnoxious amendment onto a meritorious bill as a method of procedure is becoming somewhat familiar to me. Every time we try to secure the passage of any bill in this House that relates remotely to customs matters in our State some ambitious gentleman on the Ways and Means Committee tries to tie this skeleton to the tail of it. Two years ago we wanted to have certain subports in our State granted the privileges of immediate transportation, etc. body doubted or denied that we needed the legislation that we asked for, but over our protest this custom-house skeleton was tied to the tail of that bill, like it is now sought to be tied to the skirts of this. I protest not only against the passage of this proposed amendment, but I protest against such a method of procedure.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the truth about it is that Port Townsend has been kept the port of entry for the last seven or eight years, and this Government has been paying about $50,000 a year during that time, it seems to me, without sufficient justification. Last year there was about $1,200,000 duty collected in the Puget Sound district, and of that sum over $600,000 was collected at Seattle and over $300,000 at Tacoma and only about 10 per cent of the amount at Port Townsend.

On the $900,000 collected at Seattle and Tacoma this Government has to pay $3 a thousand in order to go through the form of sending it down to Port Townsend and back again to get it started to San Francisco. Why should the Government be put to that expense? The gentleman from Washington [Mr. Why should the Government Cushman], my colleague, has said that Port Townsend is the first port you enter coming from the ocean. That is true; but only a small percentage of the boats desire to stop there. The most a small percentage of the boats desire to stop there. of them wish to go directly to Seattle and Tacoma. So far as the city of Seattle is concerned, this removal will not materially benefit it. I do not care, so far as Seattle is concerned, whether the customs-house is moved there or not, but I do believe that the time has come when the interest of the Government demands that this change be made.

Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question Mr. PAYNE. on the bill and amendments to the passage.

The question being taken on ordering the previous ques-

Mr. CUSHMAN. I raise the point of no quorum.
The SPEAKER. There is evidently not a quorum present.
Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withhold the motion for a moment?

Mr. SHERLEY. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry in regard to the motion made by the gentleman from New York. Under the rule adopted by the House, is it not re-quired that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole to consider Senate bill 529?

The SPEAKER. Not without a quorum first; second, the House can adjourn at any time that it sees fit to do so.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then the word "immediately" in the rule is not binding upon the House?

The SPEAKER. Third, if the gentleman will address himself to the rule closely, he will find that this does not interfere with conference reports, motions to suspend the rules, or appropriation bills. The Chair may go further and say that while it may not be expressly stated in the rule, it does not interfere with requests for unanimous consent, it being always in the power of any Member of the House, by calling for the regular order, to go to the regular order.

Mr. SHERLEY. I simply desired to know whether the word

"immediately" in the rule meant what is said or not.

The SPEAKER. It means exactly what it says, if the gentleman will read the whole rule.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not understand that there was any motion relative to anything excepted by the rule.

The SPEAKER. Were it not for the motion to adjourn, and there were no recognition to move to suspend the rules, and there were no appropriation bill and no conference report to be considered, then automatically the Speaker would summon the Chairman to take the chair, and the House would go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion of Mr. PAYNE was then agreed to.

Accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

The concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the Record, as fol-

Senate concurrent resolution No. 15.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 15.

Whereas the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States has by a decisive vote recommended the passage of a bill introduced by the Hon. CHARLES E. LITTLEFIELD, of Maine, which provides, in substance, that the interstate-commerce character of all shipments of intoxicating liquors shall terminate immediately upon their arrival within the State or Territory in which the place of destination is situated; and

Whereas Kansas has carried on the struggle to enforce her laws in the interest of temperance and sobriety for more than a quarter of a century against the combined influence and efforts of the liquor interests of the States situated on her borders and has received no assistance or encouragement from the Federal Government; and

Whereas the passage of said law would be of the greatest assistance to the State of Kansas, and all other States which have laws prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, or strictly regulating the sale thereof, in enforcing the same: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate of the State of Kansas (the house of representatives concurring therein). That inasmuch as the State of Kansas will be greatly benefited by the passage of said law, we request our Senators in the Senate of the United States and our Members of Congress to work and vote for said act and to use all means which vigilance, energy, and honor may dictate to secure its passage.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the senate, and passed that body February 5, 1907.

He also presented sundry memorials of citizens of Madison, Nebr., remonstrating against any reduction being made in the pay to railways for carrying the mail until the railroads have been given an opportunity to present their side of the case; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of J. V. Osburgh, of Stockham, Nebr., praying for the adoption of a certain amendment to the present service-pension law relative to attorneys' fees in pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions

He also presented a memorial of Ames Court, No. 82, Tribe of Ben Hur, of the State of Nebraska, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for a classification of second-class mail matter and the postage rates thereon; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Ministers' Association of Lincoln, Nebr., praying for the passage of the so-called "Lodge resolution" relative to the existing conditions in the Kongo Free State; which was ordered to lie on the table.

WILLIAM H. GOWDY.

Mr. SMOOT. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4629) for the relief of William H. Gowdy, to report it favorably without amendment, and

I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. HALE. I think I must object, for this reason: What I desire is to get up the sundry civil appropriation bill at once. If that can be done, I will say to Senators that I think we can complete it this afternoon and not be obliged to have another wearisome night session, but if the time is taken up by other bills we will have to run over into the night. Therefore I appeal to Senators to let the appropriation bill come up, and I must object to the consideration of any bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill reported by the Senator from Utah will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Maine that there are other bills which have come from the House which are of great importance and which will perhaps be thrown into conference. If we can have a little here before the Senator gets up the sundry civil appropriation bill for consideration, we might get some of those bills out of the way without unnecessarily interfering with the Senator.

Of course the Senator knows that we want him to get his appropriation bill through as rapidly as possible, but I submit to the Senator that we are not so very far behind at this time. There remain, I believe, only two appropriation bills to be considered by the Senate, and we have four or five days yet in which to do it.

Mr. HALE. There will be ample time for those measures when this great bill has passed the Senate and gets into conference. But I think it is important (and I think Senators will see that what I am seeking to accomplish is for the best interests of the Senate) that we take up this bill at once and complete it to-day, so that there will be no need of a night ses-After that these other bills will then come in, because there will be no other appropriation bill for several days, and we shall be in conference on this bill. So I must insist, under the circumstances, that we shall go on with the appropriation bill as soon as the routine business has been concluded.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. If the Senator insists, of course, under the rule, we have no remedy.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALLEE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9326) for the opening of Mills avenue NE. from Rhode Island avenue to Twentyfourth street, reported it without amendment, and submitted a

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2242) for the widening of Mills avenue NE. from Rhode Island avenue to Twenty-fourth street, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 97) creating a commission to investigate conditions in Alaska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. PLATT submitted an amendment providing that hereafter the salary of the appraiser at the port of New York shall be $8,000 per annum and that of each of the assistant appraisers at the port of New York shall be $4,000 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $150,000 for the installation of a pneumatic-tube system between the appraiser's warehouse and the new custom-house in the city of New York, N. Y., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted an amendment continuing in effect the general appropriation provided for in the act approved . July 8, 1898, to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise, organize, supply, and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 to pay the persons who prepared the four volumes of the Consolidated Index to the United States Statutes at Large, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DICK submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $7,200 to pay Henry W. Elliott for preparing a series of expert papers descriptive of the past condition of the fur-seal herd of Alaska, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $750 to pay Ormsby McHarg for indexing and extra services as clerk to the Committee on Pensions, and $750 to pay Dennis M. Kerr for services as assistant clerk by detail to the Committee on Pensions, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS-JOSEPH FREEMAN.

On motion of Mr. Burrows, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying Senate bill 6844 of this session of Congress, granting a pension to Joseph Freeman, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, there having been no adverse report thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS-PAUL J. CHRISTIAN.

On the motion of Mr. Culberson, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of the bill S. 7724, second session Fifty-ninth Congress, granting an increase of pension to Paul J. Christian, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, there being no adverse report thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS-MRS. SARAH E. LUNGREN.

On motion of Mr. Du Pont, it was Ordered, That Mrs. Sarah E. Lungren be allowed to withdraw from the files of the Senate her original certificate of marriage and the cer-tificate of death and burial permit for Norris L. Lungren, filed by her as evidence in connection with the bill granting her a pension as the widow of said Norris L. Lungren.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS-RANDOLPH HAYMAN.

On motion of Mr. Penrose, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of Randolph Hayman, accompanying Senate bill 5519, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, subject to the provisions of clause 2 of Rule 30.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS-JOHN ROOP.

On motion of Mr. Penrose, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of John Roop, accompanying Senate bill 501, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, subject to the provisions of clause 2 of Rule 30.

THE HARVESTER TRUST.

On motion of Mr. HANSBROUGH, it was Ordered, That 500 additional copies of Senate Document No. 336, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, be printed for the use of the RULES AND REGULATIONS OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. HEYBURN. Under this order I presume it is proper to call up the resolutions which I introduced yesterday and which went over. They are properly morning business, I believe.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there are no further concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from yesterday, which will be read.
The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr.

HEYRURN, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish to the Senate, for its information, a copy of all rules and regulations governing the Department in its various branches, pursuant to Senate resolution No. 239.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. The State Department is on a little different basis, as the Senator remembers, from all the other Departments. If the resolution means general instructions there may be some regulations for diplomatic officials which it would not be either necessary or wise to give to the public.

Mr. HEYBURN. I realize the importance of the Senator's suggestion, and I will state that the suggestion came to me when the resolution first went in. The Departments understand that the resolution does not call for anything that might come within the scope of diplomatic or confidential business. So I think they understand it.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia: H. R. 19524. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to require the erection of fire escapes in certain buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 19, 1906;

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 25745) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee be first considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Under the Treasury Department," on page 2, line 17, after the word "limit," to insert "and to provide additional accommodations for the United States courts in said building;" and in line 19, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty-five;" so as to make the clause

Asheville, N. C., post-office and court-house: For completion of the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of building under present limit, and to provide additional accommodations for the United States courts in said building, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 23, to insert:

Denver, Colo.: The Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to have plans and specifications prepared for a new building for the general purposes of the United States Government, at Denver, Colo., and to report to Congress at its next session an estimate of the cost of said building. He is also authorized and directed to use such part of the force of the office of the Supervising Architect as may be necessary for this purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 16, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to expend the entire sum of $375,000, authorized by act of June 30, 1906, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purchase of a suitable site for said United States subtreasury.

So as to make the paragraph read:

San Francisco, Cal., subtreasury: For completion of building under present limit, $175,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 17, to strike out:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by condemnation or otherwise, additional land adjoining the present site occupied by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and for the erection, completion, including heating and ventilating, of an addition to or extension of the buildings of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing which shall conform architecturally and in character and quality of the material used to the existing buildings of said Bureau, $150,000.

The amendment agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 33, to insert:

The next amendment was, at the top of page 33, to insert:

Buildings for the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce and Labor: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the whole of squares Nos. 226, 227, 228, 229, and 230, in the city of Washington, and toward the erection of one or two buildings thereon, $3,000,000. That part of C street, Ohio avenue, D street, and E street lying between the squares named herein is hereby made a part of the site authorized by this act. That should the Secretary of the Treasury decide to institute condemnation proceedings in order to secure any or all of the land herein authorized to be acquired, such proceedings shall be in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, providing a site for the enlargement of the Government Printing Office (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 26, chap. $37). That a commission, to be composed of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Attorney-General, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, which is hereby created, shall report to Congress preliminary plans and an estimate of cost for one or two buildings to be erected on said site, for the use of the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce and Labor, and for other governmental purposes, said preliminary plans and estimate of cost to be paid for out of the appropriation herein made.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to ask the Senator from

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine if this amendment is not in the nature of general legislation, and if it has any right to a place on an appropriation bill?

Mr. HALE. We have always put on appropriation bills measures for the purchase of property here in the District of Columbia, and there never has been any point raised on them.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator does not quite answer my question. I asked the Senafor if he did not himself consider it to be general legislation.

Mr. HALE. I do not consider it to be general legislation in the running of the Government to provide for public buildings here in Washington. I do not consider that that is outside of the province of the Committee on Appropriations. It was on that ground that the amendment was inserted.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Of course, if we have fallen into the practice of doing things of this kind and it has become the custom of Congress to acquiesce in it, I do not know that I care to make any objection or raise a question upon it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment was, under the subhead "Life-Saving Service," on page 40, after line 18, to insert:

For establishing a telephone line from the Umpqua River life-saving station, Oregon, to a point at the mouth of the Siuslaw River, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the subhead "Interstate Commerce Commission," on page 49, line 13, after the word "thereon," to insert "to said Commission;" in the same line, before the word "which," to strike out "a copy of;" in line 14, after the word "transmitted," to insert "by said Commission;" and in the same line, after the word "Postmaster-General," to insert "for his action thereon;" so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to keep informed regarding compliance with the "act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads," approved March 2, 1893, including the employment of inspectors to execute and enforce the requirements of the said act, $100,000; said inspectors shall also be required to make examination of the construction, adaptability, design, and condition of all mail cars used on any railroad in the United States and make report thereon to said Commission, which report shall be transmitted by said Commission to the Postmaster-General for his action thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous objects, Treasury Department," on page 51, after line 3, to strike out:

Transportation of fractional silver coin: For transportation of fractional silver coin, by registered mail or otherwise, $50,000; and in expending this sum the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to transport from the Treasury or subtreasuries, free of charge, fractional silver coin when requested to do so: Provided, That an equal amount in coin or currency shall have been deposited in the Treasury or such subtreasuries by the applicant or applicants. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress the cost arising under this appropriation.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Transportation of silver coin: For transportation of silver coin, including fractional silver coin by registered mail or otherwise, $125,000; and in expending this sum the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to transport from the Treasury or subtreasuries, free of charge, silver coin when requested to do so: Provided, That an equal amount in coin or currency shall have been deposited in the Treasury or such subtreasuries by the applicant or applicants. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress the cost arising under this appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 15 on page 53.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 53, line 13, by direction of the committee, I move to strike out "five," before "hundred," and insert "six;" and after the word "dollars" to strike out the words "and two at $1,350 each" and insert:

One at $1,400 and one at $1,200.

So as to make the paragraph read:

Custody of dies, rolls, and plates: For pay of custodian of dies, rolls, and plates used at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for the printing of Government securities, namely: One custodian, $3,000; two subcustodians, one at $2,000 and one at $1,800; three distributors of stock, one at $1,600, one at $1,400, and one at $1,200; in all, $11,000.

This is a recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury sent to the chairman this morning, and it does not change the

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

The reading was resumed. The next amendment was, at the top of page 54, to insert:

General inspector of supplies for public buildings: For one general inspector, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who may be required to inspect public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, and report on the efficiency of the custodians' forces, and the use of fuel, lights, water, miscellaneous supplies, and so forth, $3,000: and for actual necessary traveling expenses, not exceeding $2,000: in all, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 10, to insert:

Inspector of furniture and other furnishings for public buildings: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to employ a suitable person to inspect all public buildings and examine into their requirements for furniture and other furnishings, including fuel, lights, personal services, and other current expenses, $2,500; and for actual necessary traveling expenses, including actual traveling expenses of assistant, not exceeding $3,000; in all, $5,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 19, to insert: For assistant inspector of furniture and other furnishings for public buildings, $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 16, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "seven;" so as to Customs service: To defray the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs, $3,700,000, being additional to the permanent appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for the customs service, on page 58, line 9, before the word "all," to strike out "seven" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

And from and after the close of the fiscal year 1908 all sums received from fines, penalties, and forfeitures, connected with the customs, and from fees paid into the Treasury by customs officers, and from storage, cartage, drayage, labor, and services, shall be covered into the Treasury as are other miscellaneous receipts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 8, to increase the appropriation for expenses of local appraisers' meetings from $1,200 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Light-houses, beacons, and fog signals," on page 63, after line 14, to insert:

For the purchase of land as an addition to the Prudence Island light station, Rhode Island, $540.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 6, on page 65.

Mr. FRYE. I am kept absent from the Senate on a conference committee, and I have two or three important amendments that I desire to offer to the bill. I should like the Senator from Maine to consent that I shall present them now.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is so busy on the river and harbor bill that I yield to him for that purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine proposes amendments, which will be stated. At what point in the bill does the Senator from Maine desire to have the amendments in-

Mr. FRYE. They may as well come in on page 42, before the words "Engraving and Printing," at the bottom of the

The Secretary. On page 42, after line 21, it is proposed to insert:

Toward the construction of one steam revenue cutter of the first class for duty in Puget Sound and adjacent waters, as authorized by the provisions of Senate bill No. 925, and passed by both branches of Congress, $125,000, to be immediately available; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for such construction, at a cost not to exceed $225,000, the limit fixed in the bill referred to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary. It is proposed to insert after the preceding amendment:

Toward the construction of one steam revenue cutter of the first class for duty at Savannah, Ga., and adjacent waters on the Atlantic coast, as authorized by the provisions of Senate bill No. 925 and passed both branches of Congress, $100,000, to be immediately available; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for such construction at a cost not to exceed $200,000, the limit fixed by said bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary. It is proposed to insert after the preceding amendment:

For the construction of an able, sea-going tug for the United States Revenue-Cutter Service, for duty at New Bedford, Mass., and adjacent waters on the Atlantic coast, as authorized by the provisions of Senate bill No. 925 and passed by both branches of Congress, $175,000, to be immediately available; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for such construction, at a cost not to exceed the sum named.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary. It is proposed to insert after the preceding amendment:

For the construction of one boarding vessel for the United States Revenue-Cutter Service, for duty at New Orleans, La., and adjacent waters, as authorized by the provisions of Senate bill No. 925 and passed by both branches of Congress, $50,000, to be immediately available; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for such construction, at a cost not to exceed the sum named.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that he strike out the words "and passed by both branches of Congress" in each of the items.

Mr. FRYE. Those words may just as well be stricken out, and also the words "as authorized by Senate bill," etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, that change will be made in the amendments just agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> TREASURY DEPARTMENT Office of the Secretary, Washington, February 26, 1907.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE, United States Senate.

United States Senate.

Sir: I have to transmit herewith amendments to the bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, now pending in the Senate, for the construction of four new vessels for the United States Revenue-Cutter Service, and to state that the provisions of Senate bill 925, authorizing the construction of said vessels, has passed both branches of Congress.

The full sum authorized for the seagoing tug for New Bedford, Mass. ($175,000), and that authorized for the boarding boat for New Orleans, La. ($50,000), should be appropriated at this session.

Of the amount of $225,000 authorized for the revenue cutter for duty on Puget Sound, the sum of $125,000 should be appropriated at this session, and of the $200,000 for the construction of the steam cutter at Savannah, Ga., $100,000 should be appropriated at this time to enable the Department to enter upon the work of their construction.

I have respectfully to request that you cause these amendments to be added to the sundry civil bill now pending in the Senate to cover these cases.

Respectfully,

canal from $24.863,000 to $27,161,367.50.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, the amendment proposes an increase of something like $3,000,000, and yet there is no pre-ceding amendment under the head of "Isthmian canal" except that on page 205, providing for the payment of the outstanding 41 per cent first-mortgage bonds of the Panama Railway Company. So I ask the Senator in charge of the bill where this aggregate increase of something over $3,000,000 comes from?

Mr. HALE. It is $2,200,000, and is accounted for by the amendment on page 205.

Mr. CULBERSON. The amendment to which I have just referred?

Mr. HALE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 4, on page 208, line 19, after the word "act,"

And that any unexpended balance of the appropriation in the said bill "To continue the reequipment of the Panama Railroad" may be paid to the Panama Railroad Company to reimburse that company for direct expenditures for equipment and construction: Provided, That all expenses so reimbursed shall first be audited in all respects as if disbursed directly under the Commission.

So as to make the section read:

Sec. 4. That $100,000 of the said appropriation for the fiscal year 1907, "For skilled and unskilled labor on the Isthmus for the departments of construction and engineering and administration," shall be transferred to the appropriation "For skilled and unskilled labor engaged in the health and sanitation department on the Isthmus of Panama" of the same act; that $300,000 of the said appropriation "For skilled and unskilled labor on the Isthmus for the departments of construction and engineering and administration," shall be transferred to the appropriation "For miscellaneous expenditures" for the same departments, of the same act: that $50,000 of the appropriation "For pay of officers and employees other than skilled and unskilled labor on the Isthmus, for the construction and engineering and administration departments," shall be transferred to the appropriation "For pay of officers and employees other than skilled and unskilled labor engaged in the health and sanitation department on the Isthmus," of the same act.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator from Maine if the

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator from Maine if the amendment is the one to which attention has been invited by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan] in a communication to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. HALE. It was struck out to meet that suggestion, and will be considered fully in conference. That is the reason for its being struck out.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask leave, then, at this point to insert in the Record a copy of the letter of the Senator from Alabama to the committee on this question.

I am very glad the Senator has done that. Yes. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be inserted in the RECORD without being read.

The letter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC HEALTH AND NATIONAL QUARANTINE, Washington, D. C., February 25, 1907.

I wish to suggest objections to the clause in that amendment which reads as follows

"And the unexpended balance of the appropriation in said bill 'To continue the reequipment of the Panama Railroad' may be paid to the Panama Railroad Company to reimburse that company for direct expenditures for equipment and construction: Provided, That all expenses so reimbursed shall first be audited in all respects as if disbursed directly under the Commission."

A point of order, as well as a point of fact, as to this provision is, that there is not in existence any such legal corporation, company, or entity as the Panama Railroad Company, with power to exercise any of its charter functions; and the Senate has so voted and declared in the passage, by its unanimous vote in the present session, in Senate bill No. 6539, of which a copy is herewith submitted.

This bill is based upon Senate Report No. 5179, also herewith submitted, which declares that the Panama Railroad Company, a New York corporation, chartered in 1849, has no longer a legal existence with any powers for conducting the business for which it was chartered. It can not, as a corporation, give a valid receipt to any officer of the United States for the money appropriated in the House amendment to the sundry civil bill above It can not enter into a legal audit with the Isthmian Canal Commission of any direct or other expenditures it has made for equipment or construction of the Panama Railroad or for their reimbursement.

The facts and the law which have caused this disability on the part of the Panama Railroad Company are clearly stated in the report of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, herewith submitted, and need not be restated by the undersigned.

The honorable Secretary of War, in a written statement made before that committee, after presenting every argument that ingenuity could suggest to establish an existing legal vitality for the Panama Railroad Company, was compelled to characterize it as "an artificial entity." He had already established in that statement that he was the artificer of that legal myth, and he invented a new phase-" an artificial entity "-to give it even the form of actual existence. In doing this he did not fail to prove that it is not a legal entity.

The United States purchased and paid for every share of stock of the Panama Railroad Company and all of its property of every kind in America, and it was delivered with the treaty consent of the Government of Panama on the 9th day of May, 1904. The stock was deposited with the Secretary of War who, in order to create an "artificial entity" to exercise the powers that had belonged to the New York corporation, sold without any legal authority thirteen shares of $100 each to as many men to qualify them for election by him as directors of the Panama Railroad Company. In order to have the board of directors under the control of the Isthmian Canal Commission, he thus attempted to qualify and elected each of the seven Commissioners as a member of the board of directors. In the same manner he qualified and elected six other persons as members of said board who were not commissioners

This "artificial entity" then proceeded as an independent corporation to assert ownership and control over all the property that had been owned, or that could be owned, or bought by the so-called "Panama Railroad Company." Its receipts and disbursements were near $6,000,000 annually. All of these sums belonged to the United States, but no account of these was kept on the books of the Treasury of the United States, as is shown officially by statements of the Secretary of the Treasury which have been laid before the Senate and printed as public documents.

Several very important contracts have been made between the Canal Commission and this "artificial entity," including the charter parties of ships, the lending and borrowing of large sums of money, the purchase of coal for the canal at a profit, the issue and sale of bonds by the Panama Railroad Company, the purchase of commissary supplies for the canal employees, the Markel Hotel contract, and many other transactions and agreements that could only be made by competent parties, each dealing with its own property, independently of the others.

The income of the railroad property, which must have netted as much as 6 per cent per annum on the money paid for it by the United States, has been thus added to the annual expenditures of the Commission for canal construction without appropriation by Congress, and without accounting for the same with the Treasury of the United States.

In these transactions the president of the Canal Commission has dealt with himself as the president of the Panama Railroad Company, while the Secretary of War has directed him in all things, both in his dealings with the "artificial entity" of the Panama Railroad Company and with the Isthmian Canal Commission.

Not only does the point of order above stated hold good against the House amendment above quoted, but it is new legislation, and is manifestly intended to exempt the Canal Commission and the so-called "Panama Railroad Company" from accounting with the Treasury Department for the money appropriated by said amendment.

But there is a question of proper government and of public policy and of proper accountability of public officers involved in this legislation that rises far above any question of order.

When President Shonts, of the Canal Commission, has made his settlement of the "direct expenditures for the equipment and construction" with President Shonts of the "artificial entity," called the "Panama Railroad Company," these expenditures will be "audited in all respects as if disbursed by the Commission," and the railroad company will give the receipt of its president, Mr. Shonts, to Mr. Shonts, president of the Isthmian Canal Commission, and this expenditure will float off into the general accounts of the Canal Commission which the Treasury of the United States will never audit.

This appropriation is, evidently, a healing act to cure the irregularities of the vast dealings of the Panama Railroad Company with the Canal Commission, and to legalize the "artificial entity" which the Senate has voted to abolish.

I therefore respectfully urge that the Senate Committee on Appropriations will strike that part of the House amendment that I have pointed out, from the bill.

I further suggest that the bill herewith submitted, No. 6539, should be placed as a Senate amendment on the sundry civil bill.

With great respect,

JNO. T. MORGAN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 210, after line 18, to strike out section 11, as follows:

was, on page 210, after line 18, to strike out section 11, as follows:

Sec. 11. Hereafter all supplies of fuel, ice, stationery, and other miscellaneous supplies for the Executive Departments and other Government establishments in Washington, when the public exigencies do not require the immediate delivery of the article, shall be advertised and contracted for by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, instead of by the several Departments and establishments, upon such days as he may designate. There shall be a general supply committee, composed of officers, one from each such Department and Independent establishment in Washington, designated by the head thereof, the duties of which committee shall be to make, under the direction of the said Secretary, an annual schedule of required miscellaneous supplies, to standardize such supplies, eliminating all unnecessary grades and varieties, and to aid said Secretary in soliciting bids based upon formulas and specifications drawn up by such experts in the service of the Government as the committee may see fit to call upon, who shall render whatever assistance they may require. The committee shall also aid said Secretary in securing the proper fulfillment of the contracts for such supplies, for which purpose the said Secretary shall prescribe, and all Departments comply with, rules for examining and testing the articles received; in making additions to the said schedule, in opening and considering the bids, and shall perform such other similar duties as he may assign to them: Provided, That the articles intended to be purchased in this manner are those in common use by or suitable to the ordinary needs of two or more such Departments or establishments; but the said Secretary shall have discretion to add to the annual common supply schedule from time to time any articles that, in his judgment, can as well be thus purchased: And provided further, That telephone service and electric light and power service shall be so obtained by him. And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 11. For acquiring pieces or parcels of land for parks in the District of Columbia, as follows:

For those pieces and parcels of land lying east of Massachusetts avenue extended, north of Rock Creek and west of Woodley Park, containing 99 acres, more or less, $375,000.

For the several parcels of ground included between Euclid street, Columbia avenue or Fifteenth street, W street or Florida avenue, and Sixteenth street extended, containing 437,000 square feet, more or less, $475,000.

For the several parcels of ground lying near the intersection of Branch avenue and Pennsylvania avenue southeast, known as the Carpenter tract and the Pennsylvania Avenue Heights tract, containing 122 acres, more or less, $150,000.

For the tract of land known as Montrose, lying immediately north of road of U street and east of Lovers Lane on Georgetown Heights, containing 16 acres, more or less, $140,000: Provided, That one-half of the above-named sums, or so much thereof as may be expended, shall be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the revenues of the District of Columbia in four equal annual installments with interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum upon the deferred payments. And the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to acquire said park or parks by purchase at such sum or sums as they deem reasonable, not to exceed in any case the respective sums above provided for each park.

The amendment was agreed to.
The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. HALE obtained the floor. Mr. CLAY. Mr. President-

Mr. HALE. I have some committee amendments to offer.

Mr. CLAY. Has the last amendment been agreed to?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee amendments have been agreed to.

Mr. CLAY. I desire the amend be considered open for a moment. I desire the amendment on pages 212 and 213 to Mr. HALE. I have certain committee amendments to propose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 160, after line 25, insert:

For improvement of sewerage and drainage system, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 67, after line 9, I move to insert:

Second light-house district: For a light vessel for use near the eastern end of Hedge Fence Shoal, entrance to Vineyard Sound, Massachusetts, at a cost not to exceed $115,000.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. HALE. On the same page, after line 11, I move to insert:

A light and fog-signal station at or near the west end of the draw in the Lehigh Valley Railroad bridge at Passaic, N. J., at a cost not to exceed $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 9, after line 14, I move to insert:

Erie, Pa., post-office: For additional land, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 154, after line 10, I move to insert:

For renewal of plumbing, $6,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 172, after line 13, I move to insert:

Rent of buildings, Department of Justice: For the rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia, used by the Department of Justice, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move to insert, after the preceding amend-

Contingent expenses, Department of Justice, furniture and repairs: For furniture and repairs, additional, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move to insert, after the preceding item:

Contingent expenses, Department of Justice, miscellaneous items: For miscellaneous expenditures, including telegraphing, fuel, lights, foreign postage, labor, repairs of buildings, care of grounds, books of reference, periodicals, typewriters, exchange of same, and other necessaries directly ordered by the Attorney-General, additional, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 9, after line 22, I move to strike out all of the paragraph with reference to the Fairmont, W. Va., postoffice and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to expend not to exceed the sum of $25,000 from the sum already authorized for the limit of the cost of the public building at Fairmont, W. Va., for the purchase of a site.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Iowa has an amendment to

Mr. ALLISON. On page 147, after line 19, on behalf of the committee, I propose the following amendment:

Fort Sheridan: That the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, approved April 28, 1904, be so amended as to make the funds appropriated for the enlargement of the reservation for Fort Sheridan available, with the approval of the Secretary of War, for the purchase of a tract of land containing approximately 11a acres on the northeast corner of the reservation in addition to that for the purchase of which provision is made in said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 23, line 14, after the word "dollars,"
I move to strike out the word "including" and to insert "exclusive of;" and in line 15 to strike out "but inclusive" and insert the word "and;" so as to read:

Richmond, Va., post-office, court-house, and custom-house: For continuation of reconstruction and enlargement of building under present limit, $260,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for reconstructing and enlarging the building at a total cost not to exceed $500,000, exclusive of the sums herein and heretofore appropriated and of the cost of site.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 67, after line 2, I move to insert:

For the construction of a light-house and fog-signal station of the second order, together with a keeper's house and all necessary equipment, under plans prepared by the Light-House Board, to be located at the easterly end of Gull Island, Apostle Group, westerly end of Lake Superior, Wisconsin, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be neces-

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. On page 104, line 10, I move to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "five hundred;" so as to read: "and indemnity for swamp lands, $500,000."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I object, and I desire to be heard on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. If it is persisted in, of course there will be a long debate. We have had that question up and we have discussed it before.

Mr. HALE. The amendment will cause very wide debate, and I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will not press it.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the amendment be read.

The Secretary. On page 104, under the heading "Depredations on public timber, protecting public lands, and settlement of claims for swamp land and swamp-land indemnity," line 10, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "five hundred;" so as to read five hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. SPOONER. Let the Secretary read what precedes it. The Secretary. As proposed to be amended the clause would read as follows:

To meet the expenses of protecting timber on the public lands, and for the more efficient execution of the law and rules relating to the cutting thereof; of protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, and of adjusting claims for swamp lands, and indemnity for swamp lands, $500,000.

Let us have a vote, Mr. President. Mr. HALE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the amendment ought to be adopted. I understand from the Senator from Maine, who has the bill in charge, that it will lead to very elaborate debate, and he is of the opinion that it will possibly endanger the bill.

Mr. HALE. Yes.
Mr. SPOONER. Of course, under the circumstances, I do not feel like pressing the amendment. I withdraw it.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin withdraws the amendment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I direct the attention of the Senator from Maine in charge of the bill to page 113, line 13—the provision relative to topographical surveys. For several years past it has been customary to appropriate $350,000 for these surveys. The House, inadvertently, as I understand it, cut down the appropriation for topographical surveys to $300,000 this year. The committee has evidently overlooked the matter or failed to increase it to the usual sum. In line 13, on page 113, after the word "hundred," I move to insert the words "and fifty;" so as to bring the sum for topographical surveys up to the amount that has been appropriated from year to year.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. In line 13, page 113, after the word "hundred," insert "and fifty;" so as to read:

For topographical surveys in various portions of the United States, $350,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. On page 147, after line 14, I move to insert:

For the acquisition, by purchase or condemnation, of about 16,000 acres of land lying between and adjacent to the military reservation and the wood and timber reservation of Fort Robinson, Nebr., $140,000, or so much thereof as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, said sum to be immediately available.

Mr. HALE. I do not find that this has been estimated for, and therefore it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BURKETT. I do not know whether a point of order would lie under the circumstances. The bill was introduced and referred to the committee and favorably reported by the committee. I will ask the Senator to let the amendment go on the bill, and by the time it goes into conference he can see about it.

Mr. HALE. I can not agree to that. It has not been estimated for.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine insist on his point of order?

Mr. HALE. I am obliged to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken. The Chair sustains the point of

Mr. SCOTT. On page 16, after line 19, I move to insert:

Mr. SCOTT. On page 10, after line 13, 1 move to insert.

Lynchburg, Va.: For the extension and enlargement of the United States building which contains the United States court rooms, clerk's office, and post-office, $70,000, in addition to the sum of $80,000 appropriated in extension of the limit of cost by act of Congress approved June 30, 1906, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the previded, That so much of the act of Congress approved June 10, 1882, entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Lynchburg, Va.." as requires that the building be protected by a fire limit of at least 40 feet, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. On page 147, after line 2, I move to insert:

Provided, however, That $50,000 of said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be available to purchase a permanent water supply, with land therewith connected, and to purchase material and construct a water plant for Fort William Henry Harrison, Mont.

Mr. HALE. I can not agree to that amendment for one. The committee has appropriated very largely for these subjects and has left the discretion with the Secretary of War. If we begin to declare that certain parts shall go in certain directions; there are a dozen Senators who have the same object in view. Mr. CARTER. I submit to the Senator that the amendment does leave it entirely discretionary with the Secretary of War. The provision, it will be perceived, places a restriction upon the As to an expenditure for this purpose the matter expenditure.

is made entirely discretionary with the Secretary of War.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator had better fight it out with

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator had better light it out with the Secretary of War, as all other Senators do. Mr. CARTER. The difficulty is that the phraseology of the bill leaves to the Secretary of War no discretion. The amend-ment simply vests the discretion in the Secretary of War should he desire to allow this particular improvement to be made. One year ago we appropriated a sum of money for the purpose of making a survey to determine the extent of the water supply and its availability. This permits the Secretary of War to proceed if, in his discretion, it seems advisable so to do.

Mr. HALE. I do not think I ought to accept the amendment. I will take the sense of the Senate on it.

Mr. CARTER. I hope the Senator will accept it.
Mr. HALE. Let the question be put.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, in justice to myself I wish to say a word in regard to the amendment on pages 212 and 213. On February 25, 1907, I introduced an amendment to the sundry civil bill, for the purpose of buying certain lands for parks. I did it by request, stating at the time that I would investigate the matter carefully, and if I reached the conclusion that the lands were needed for parks, I would support it.

I find that the bill on pages 212 and 213 provides for the purchase of the necessary lands for four parks and carries an appropriation of $1,140,000. I believe there ought to be a park established in Georgetown. I am not prepared to say, however, that at this time we ought to purchase all of these lands, paying therefor $1,140,000.

Mr. President, I have carefully investigated the matter and I am satisfied that the amendment I introduced ought not to pass. It has not been inserted in this bill; it is still pending before the Committee on Appropriations; and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. CLAY. Now, I simply desire to be recorded as voting against the proposition to purchase all of these parks at one time. I believe that if we are going to improve the city and make further improvements in regard to parks we ought to buy one tract at one session of Congress and another at another session of Congress, but to buying four at a time, appropriating $1,140,000 when this bill carries $114,000,000, I can not give my approval.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly. Mr. SCOTT. Did not the Senator at the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress vote for the appropriation of the money necessary to buy all these parks?

Mr. CLAY. I did not.

Mr. SCOTT. It passed the Senate without any objection.

Mr. CLAY. A good many measures have passed the Senate that I have not voted for. I want to say to the Senate, I regret to say it, in most instances, I have been reported as voting "no," for I belong to the minority.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CLAY. I yield to the Senator with pleasure. Mr. SPOONER. If Congress should not acquire the lands for these parks now, and if it should be done in installments, the Government in the end would have to pay more and more,

Mr. CLAY. I have never been convinced that we need four more parks at this time, or that we will need them in the very near future.

I say to the Senator this one item carries nearly half a million dollars, and I understand that we are to pay that amount of money for 5 or 6 acres of land. It is valuable land it is true, but I have never reached a conclusion that the Government of the United States ought to pay any such price for that piece of property.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator, because I know he always wants to be accurate, that my information is that there are 10 acres in that tract, the so-called "Meridian Hill

Mr. CLAY. I have understood that there are 6 or 7 acres I have generally found the Senator from New Hampshire accurate and correct in regard to District matters; but I will say I had no idea we would attempt to buy all these parks at one time.

Mr. President, I told the Senator in charge of the bill that I simply desired to be recorded as having voted against these four propositions. I will not make the point of order against the amendment of the committee. It is a matter for the Senate to pass upon, but I am unwilling to be recorded as voting in favor of the four propositions.

I should not have made this statement had it not been for the fact that I introduced an amendment to purchase certain lands with a distinct understanding that I was to investigate the matter thoroughly, and then if I approved it I would support it. But such investigation has led me to believe that I ought not to support this amendment.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I appreciate the force of what the Senator from Georgia says. The committee has put on the whole proposition covering the four parks. It is in accordance with what the committee believes is the general sentiment of the people of Washington and of Congress that from time to time we should purchase some additional parks.

I may say that I do not expect as a result of the amendment, if it passes, that we shall get this year all of the parks. shall not get, I believe, more than one or two of these pieces, and another year we will try it with perhaps an addition. I think the committee is reasonable about it, and I hope the conference committee will be reasonable about it, and that we shall from time to time improve the city for those who come after us by extending the park facilities so that Washington will be what it ought to be and is to be, the finest winter city in the world.

There is no appropriation of money that is more fitting and proper than from time to time to increase the park facilities. It is what not only beautifies the city, but makes it more healthful. This appropriation is not for any select class, but it is for the millions, if there are ever millions here. Out of this, if the amendment is allowed to remain in the bill, I think we will get something as a beginning this year.

Mr. CLAY. Then I understand the Senator simply agrees practically with what I said.
Mr. HALE. I see the force of what the Senator says.
Mr. CLAY. The Senator thinks we ought to buy one this year and another at another time, and gradually improve the city, and not buy them all at one time.

Mr. HALE. That is all I expect.
Mr. GALLINGER. It is proper, Mr. President, I should say, in reference to this matter, that bills have been offered in the Senate and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, of which committee I chance to be chairman, and that committee has been without dissent in favor of all these park

In addition to that, a joint select committee was appointed on the 15th day of January, 1907, and that joint select committee, after very careful consideration and personal inspection of these proposed park areas, reported unanimously in favor of their purchase. That report is signed by the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Scort], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Blackburn]; Richard Bartholdt, of Missouri; E. C. Burleigh, of Maine, and J. H. BANKHEAD, of Alabama.

So this is not a haphazard matter. It has received the most careful and patient consideration, and the Senate certainly has placed itself on record, as has this joint select committee, in favor of the purchase of all these sites.

Mr. President, I feel regret that the Senator from Maine has suggested that when this matter gets into conference undoubtedly it will be emasculated. I hope it will not be. I am very familiar with what is going on in reference to the matter outside, and I trust that, so far as the Senate conferees are concerned, if it goes into the bill, they will stand earnestly in favor of these four prepositions. of these four propositions.
The VICE-PRESIDENT.

The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 13566) to amend sections 6 and 12 of the currency act, approved March 14, 1900.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid aside until the consideration of the pending bill is con-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside until the sundry civil appropriation bill is disposed of. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from New Hampshire will proceed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have said all I care to y. This matter, as I suggested, has received very patient and careful consideration, and it is the judgment of those of us who have investigated it that we can well afford, considering the development of this capital city at the present time, to make an investment of $1,000,000 for additional parks.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.
Mr. MALLORY. Did the joint commission to which he refers take into consideration the present price of the property as compared with what will probably be the price in a few years?
Mr. GALLINGER. If I understood the question propounded by the Senator from Florida, I will say that that commission as well as the Committee on the District of Columbia are fully cognizant of the fact that prices in this District are very rapidly advancing year by year, and the committee and the commission are fully persuaded that unless the purchase is made now of these different sites, if we are ever to acquire them in the future, we will have to pay a great deal more for them than at the present time.

Mr. MALLORY. In other words, if it is desirable to have them, it is better to have them now than to postpone the purchase for some years?

Mr. GALLINGER. That was the conclusion reached by the committee and the commission.

Now, I have said all I care to say, because I want the bill to pass as speedily as possible. I desire to put in the RECORD at this point a brief report made by the joint select committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The report referred to is as follows:

To the Congress:

The report referred to is as follows:

To the Congress:

The joint committee authorized by section 25 of "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings," etc., to take into consideration the advisability of purchasing a proposed addition to Rock Creek Park, the so-called "Merdian Hill site," the so-called "Carpenter and Pennsylvania Avenue Heights, for park purposes, beg leave to report as follows:

Your committee has given much attention to the hearings held at various times before the District Committees of both Houses, and after thoroughly examining the testimony presented made a careful personal inspection of each of the proposed sites.

It found, in reference to the proposition for the purchase of the so-called "Carpenter tract," that beyond the Eastern Branch of the Anacostia River there is no large public park, and that there is a popular demand and necessity for such a reservation. This tract is beautifully located, covered with timber, and affords a magnificent view of the city. It contains about 140 acres, and can be purchased at a much lower price now than in the future.

The committee found that that section of the city formerly known as "Georgetown" is entirely lacking in parks, and are of the opinion that the Montrose tract on Georgetown Heights is the most desirable and reasonable in that locality.

The proposed addition to Rock Creek Park runs along the western boundary of Rock Creek and extends up the valley of a small branch running approximately parallel to Massachusetts avenue. The valley of this branch is very deep, and the land abutting the creek is covered with a growth of large and beautiful trees. This land has been owned by two or three different estates, and up to the present time the property remains undeveloped. It comprises about S8 acres, and its addition to Rock Creek Park would be of great benefit not only to that section of the city, but to the beautification of the park itself. It iseasy of access and within a few years will undoubtedly be surrounded by quit procurement of these tracts, and it is hoped that the House will take similar action.

N. B. SCOTT.
J. H. GALLINGER.
J. C. S. BLACKBURN.
RICHARD BARTHOLDT.
E. C. BURLEIGH. J. H. BANKHEAD.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, the residents of "Georgetown," so called, a part of Washington, have no park at all. acres we selected for a park are historical as well as being well adapted for a small park. There are beautiful trees in the tract. In a few years, possibly by next year, it would be impossible to acquire that property.

We all know that the French embassy is going to build out Sixteenth street on the hill; and the first thing you know the ground for the park there will be taken away from us and we would have to pay possibly in five years from now ten times what we would pay for it to-day.

In regard to the extension of Rock Creek Park-that beautiful park-the ground that we propose to buy there brings it out flush with one of the main avenues of the city. If the proposi-tion for these four parks could go through as a whole it would connect Rock Creek Park with the contemplated park in Georgetown and make it almost one continuous park. I understand the option on the ground in the Rock Creek extension will expire in a few days, and possibly we never could get for the same price or the same inducement that we can get to-day the eastern park on the other side of Rock Creek. It is a beautiful site, and certainly no Senator on this floor can object to the price that parcel of land is offered to the Government for. If you visit the hilltop site, at the head of Sixteenth street, you will see one of the most beautiful sights about Washington; you can view the entire city from that hill.

I do hope it will be the pleasure of the conferees on the bill to keep all four of these parks in the bill, because it is a case of economy. We a very short time. We would have to pay much more for the land in

Mr. HALE. I should like to get them all. We will get all we can. The Senator need have no fear about that. We have to deal with another branch of the Government, but the conferees, I have no doubt, will get everything that is possible on the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 5, line 4, after the word "dollars,"

I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 5, line 4, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

And the provision of the act approved June 30, 1906, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, which provides that all expense incident to the occupancy of the building in question shall be paid from the sum of $10,000 then appropriated for rent of temporary quarters at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I offer an amendment to come in on page 117, after line 22

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, that amendment constitutes a page or so, and before it is read from the desk, I desire to say to the Senator in charge of the bill that it embraces a matter which has been passed by the Senate, favorably reported by the Department, carries no appropriation, and is a provision for the creation of a park around a lake which is being taken possession of for private purposes and spoiled.

Mr. SPOONER. Where is the lake located?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is a lake in Idaho, and the land surrounding it should be preserved as a public park. The Department agrees to it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Has this been estimated for by the Department? Mr. HALE.

Mr. HEYBURN. It carries no appropriation.

But has the Department recommended it?

Mr. HEYBURN. The Department has recommended it, and the Senate has passed it, and, as I have said, it requires no appropriation. Mr. SPOONER. But it is an appropriation of land.

Mr. HALE. I was going to ask the Senator from Idaho has it passed the Senate?

Mr. HEYBURN. It has passed the Senate.
Mr. HALE. At this session?
Mr. HEYBURN. At this session. As I have said, it is to prevent the spoiling of a piece of land.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 117, after line 22, it is proposed to insert:

That the following subdivisions now embraced in the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, in Idaho, to wit: Sections 1, 2, and 12, township 46 north, range 4 west, Boise meridian; sections 35 and 36, township 47 north, range 4 west, Boise meridian; all of those portions of sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, township 46 north, range 3 west, Boise meridian, lying south and west of the St. Joe River in said township; all of those portions of sections 31 and 32, township 47 north, range 3 west, Boise meridian, lying south and west of St. Joe River in said township, is reserved and withdrawn from allotment and settlement and dedicated and set apart as a public park or pleasuring ground for the benefit and enjoyment of the people: Provided, That the Coeur d'Alene tribe of Indians shall be paid the appraised value of said lands, and all persons who locate or settle upon or occupy any part of the land thus set apart as a public park, except as provided in the following section, shall be considered trespassers and removed therefrom.

the land thus set apart as a puone park, except as provided in the following section, shall be considered trespassers and removed therefrom.

Sec. 2. That such public park shall be under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Interior, whose duty it shall be, as soon as practicable, to make and publish such regulations as he may deem necessary or proper for the care and management of the same. Such regulations shall provide for the preservation from injury or spoliation of all timber, mineral deposits, natural curiosities, or wonders within the park, and their retention in their natural condition. The Secretary may, in his discretion, grant leases for building purposes for terms not exceeding ten years, of small parcels of ground at such places in the park as may require the erection of buildings for the accommodation of visitors, all of the proceeds of such leases and all other revenues that may be derived from any source connected with the park to be expended, under his direction, in the management of the same and the construction of roads and bridle paths therein. He shall provide against the wanton destruction of the fish and game found within the park and against their capture and destruction for the purposes of merchandise or profit. He shall also cause all persons trespassing upon the same to be removed therefrom, and, generally, is authorized to take all such measures as may be necessary or proper to fully carry out the objects and purposes of this section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 11, after line 6.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 11, after line 6, it is proposed to in-

For the purchase of a site for a public building at Grafton, W. Va., $15,000 in addition to the amount heretofore appropriated.

Mr. HALE. Has that provision been passed upon by the Senate at this session?

Mr. SCOTT. I will say that the House, in the first session of this Congress, appropriated $10,000 for this purpose, but the Treasury Department informed me that they could not buy a suitable site for that amount, and recommended that I offer an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill asking for this additional appropriation.

Mr. HALE. The matter not having been passed upon by the Senate, I think the point of order will lie against it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I now offer an amendment, on page 107, line 14, to insert after the word "lines" what I send to the

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 107, line 14, after the word "lines," it is proposed to insert:

For the completion of the survey of the public lands within the State of Idaho, reserved and unreserved, $200,000, said surveys to be completed according to the rectangular system of public-land surveys without waiting for a demand or request for surveys on the part of settlers.

Mr. HALE. I feel compelled to make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to say a word upon it before the Senator insists on his point of order.

Mr. HALE. Very well; I will hear the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in discussing this question the other day I gave notice that I would offer this amendment. I then stated that Idaho had been badly treated in this regard. Only 42 per cent of her lands have been surveyed, while Colorado has been surveyed up to 95 per cent and Wyoming up to 91 per cent. Of course, until lands are surveyed no title can be acquired thereto. It seems to me that we in Idaho have been very badly neglected or used in the past. I should like to have seen this additional appropriation made. I know it is subject to a point of order, but I had hoped that such a point would not be urged against it.

Mr. HALE. I hope we may be able to take care of this matter at the next session; but the amendment is clearly subject to the point of order, and I feel compelled to make the point.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is subject to the point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, on page 104 of the bill there is a provision with respect to depredations on public timber and the protection of public lands. It makes an appropriation of $250,000 as a fund to meet the expenses of investigation and the prevention of fraud. A further proviso has been inserted, which I think is new and very important legislation. The proviso to which I refer begins at line 11, and is as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the examination of the lands embraced in any entry upon, which final proof has been made, unless the Department has information furnish-ing good grounds to suspect fraud or noncompliance with law as to that specific entry.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the effect of the lines read will be practically to nullify the order which the President has made, through his Secretary of the Interior, for the suspension of patents on public lands, not only homestead lands, but coal and timber lands as well. It may be that there is a perfectly good explanation for this provision; but it does seem to me that so important a piece of legislation ought to have some explanation.

Mr. President-Mr. WARREN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do. Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I understand that that proviso was put in with the intention of relieving a situation which I hardly think was considered when the Executive order was made; that is to say, as to the large number of land proofs which had passed to the last stage, except the actual writing of the patents; but the General Land Office has construed the order to hold back those as well as all the others. There are many thousands of such homesteads and other claims, and the actual settlers are suffering for their patents, so as to be able to raise money on them for further improvements. It seems to me that if the Senator will look again at the provision he will find that it is properly guarded, because it permits the Department to stop any of them if fraud is suspected. I think the provision is well guarded as it stands.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; hardly that, I will say to the Senator; they must have good grounds for suspecting fraud in each specific case before they can stop it.

Mr. WARREN. Would the Senator want them to suspend without having good grounds?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am just saying that the Senator did not accurately state the effect of the provision.

Mr. WARREN. I will read it, and perhaps that will be more accurate. It reads as follows:

Unless the Department has information furnishing good grounds to suspect fraud or noncompliance with law as to that specific entry.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say with reference to that, Mr. President, that there is a class of cases where the presumption of fraud ought to obtain.

May I ask the Senator a question? Mr. FULTON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. A little later.

Mr. FULTON. I simply want to ask the Senator if in that kind of a case there would not be good grounds to suspect fraud?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Hardly, when the provision requires good grounds for suspecting fraud with respect to the specific You may have a wide territory where you know that fraudulent entries have been made generally, and where the presumption should be that all of the entries there are fraudulent, and that patents should be suspended for the time being, and still not have such information as to warrant suspension of patents in many specific cases of entries actually fraudulent. This is the situation exactly in the case of the coal lands of some Western States. I have examined briefly and hurriedly some of the testimony taken by the Interstate Commerce Commission with reference to coal lands that have been appropriated by the railroad companies in some of these States, where it is shown that officials of the railroad companies, holding official positions in the coal companies organized within the railroad company, have employed men to make scores and scores of entries, paying them a few dollars apiece for their rights. This testimony shows that along the lines of leading western railroads the practice of procuring Government coal lands by means of fraudulent entries is regularly and systematically pursued. The whole system connected with the making of these coal-land entries is permeated with fraud and perjury. One of the leading coal companies maintains a corps of prospectors in the field constantly looking up and locating the most valuable coal lands with a view to making entry thereon by means of "dummy entrymen." When such a state of facts as this is known to exist, it is clearly competent for the Government to withhold patents on all such lands until it shall have been shown by actual investigation that the requirements of the law have been complied with in good faith.

I suggest to the committee and to the Senate that, if this provision is to remain in the bill, and if there is with respect to settlers and homesteaders some grounds for extending to them some relief, the provision ought to be amended in line 13, and I offer an amendment, Mr. President, to insert, on page 104, line 13, after the word "any," the word "homestead;" so that the clause will read as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the examination of the lands embraced in any homestead entry upon which final proof has been made, unless the Department has information furnishing good grounds to suspect fraud or noncompliance with law as to that specific entry.

The effect of this amendment would be to make this appropriation available for the investigation of all coal land and other entries, excepting homestead entries on which final proof has been made. It would practically require the issuance of patents on all such homestead entries, except in specific cases in which the Government has information affording good grounds for suspecting fraud.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] will be stated.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, there is very serious objection to that amendment.

The Secretary. On page 104, line 13, before the word "en-y," it is proposed to insert the word "homestead."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, this proviso, the Senate will observe, relates wholly and solely to cases where final proof has been made. In the case of a mineral entry, for instance, after final proof has been made, no adverse claim having been filed and the party being entitled to a patent, it seems to me the very height of folly for Congress to appropriate money to send special agents to examine mineral claims concerning which the special agents will, in the main, have no knowledge at all.

The mineral-land laws do not contemplate an obligation upon the part of the locater of a mining claim to ever apply for a patent. Any person, a citizen of the United States, or a person who has declared his intention to become such, may, upon making a discovery contemplated by the law on the public domain of a mineral claim, locate the same 1,500 feet in length by 600 feet in width, and upon that location being made under and in conformity with local laws, rules, or regulations, the party making the location may hold it for a thousand years without ever making final proof or applying for a patent. The courts have held-and, I think, correctly-that the locater's right to that ground embraced within the mineral claim is such an estate as even the Government itself can not divest the locater of without due process of law.

After the final proof has been made in a mineral case, where the party applies for a patent, an agent of the Government of the United States, it will be found in the record, has certified to the discovery, has certified to the improvements and the character of the improvements, and that agent, having been upon the ground and having thus certified, I now inquire why the Government of the United States should appropriate money to send another agent there to make an additional inquiry?

It has been repeatedly and truthfully said that the best mines of which we now have knowledge, some of the best-paying properties on this continent, have been repeatedly condemned in the early stages of their development by great experts sent to examine them. I undertook to cite here the other day the case of the United Verde mines in the Territory of Arizona, owned principally by my colleague [Mr. Clark of Montana], which had been on three separate occasions condemned by high-priced experts as not worthy of the cost of further development, and yet it is known that that is to-day one of the great producing properties of the continent. Where the mighty volume of copper is now coming out by the tens of thousands of tons each day from the butte hills, mining experts in the early days pronounced the ore so low of grade and refractory in character as to be unworthy of attention in a mining way.

Now, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] thinks, in the presence of conditions like these, requiring for the elucidation of certain facts the investment of a vast amount of money and of labor, requiring great skill and scientific knowledge, that the Government should refuse to give any title at all until some $125 per month agent goes out and ascertains whether the property is of such value as to warrant the Government in parting with title to it at the rate of $5 per acre. This amendment would lead, however, to that very ridiculous result.

Under the circumstances, realizing, I take it, that the Senator from Wisconsin has given little attention to this matter and does not wish to provoke a discussion here which could only show the value of the proviso and the lack of merit in the amendment, I move to lay his proposed amendment on the table.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Montana to lay the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin on the table, and that motion is not debatable.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. CARTER. I should like to have the sense of the Senate on the matter. I presume the Senator in charge of the bill is desirous of getting through with it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.
The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators an-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Sixty Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter] to lay the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] on the table.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Upon that I ask for the year and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to have the amendment stated. I was not in the room when it was read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 104, line 13, before the word "entry," it is proposed to insert the word "homestead;" so that the proviso will read:

Mr. HALE. I move to amend, on line 2, page 115, by changing the total footing of the appropriation for the United States Geological Survey to $1,570,020.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 161, line 3, I move to change the footing to $419,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 169, line 9, I move to change the total so as to read "$4,536,369."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

RULES AND REGULATIONS OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 1st instant, copies of all rules and regulations governing the administration of affairs in the Department of the Interior generally and institutions thereunder; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table.

I will send up the amendment to the amendment and will offer it in this form.

That part of the amendment which I have just read simply legalizes what the Secretary of the Treasury has been doing for the last two or three years. My understanding is that for the first time a Secretary of the Treasury has gone outside of the law and taken other securities than United States bonds, and that the securities he has taken have been of the class referred to-State bonds and stocks and bonds such as the savings banks of Massachusetts and New York are permitted to invest their funds in.

The other day the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] called attention to the fact that a bank which was obliged to invest in 2 per cent United States bonds and put them up as security would not have sufficient income to derive any profit, but on the contrary would incur loss from putting up such bonds and getting Government deposits. But while that may be true as to the 2 per cent bonds, where you open the doors legally and the Secretary of the Treasury has done it, as a matter of fact, without law-and allow banks to deposit these other classes of securities, that argument does not apply, for the reason that a large number of banks throughout the country keep a fair proportion of their assets invested in securities of this kind. They keep them as a permanent investment. Most of them draw about 3 per cent interest, and they are kept in the vaults of the banks.

If the banks can utilize those bonds by putting them up as security with the Treasurer of the United States, and receive Government deposits upon those bonds and loan out the money, of course they derive a great profit. There is no reason under the sun why when national banks have such bonds and derive a great profit from the transaction a part of that profit should not inure to the Government of the United States.

In the various States of the Northwest-I do not know how many States, but I am familiar with some-they have a system by which the State funds are deposited in the banks of the State and the State receives a reasonable amount of interest, generally now, I think, about 2 per cent. A few years ago it was about 3 per cent. Now, what has proved to be good experience in the States, what has proved to be wise policy, ought to be adopted by the Federal Government. To be sure a distinction is made that the Government requires bonds to be deposited.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President— Mr. NELSON. I will listen to the Senator from New York.

Mr. DEPEW. I simply wanted to make the inquiry whether in the case of State deposits bonds or other securities are re-I simply wanted to make the inquiry whether quired; whether those deposits are not made the same as individual deposits?

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no; the banks are required to give se-

Mr. DEPEW. But not bonds.

Mr. NELSON. In some cases bonds and in some cases, in the cases I am familiar with, they are required to give personal bonds with security. The deposits are not based upon the general assets of the bank, nor are they in the condition of ordinary deposits, and they can be drawn upon at any time.

But, Mr. President, I regret that owing to a bad cold from which I am suffering I am unable to discuss this matter as I should like to do to-day; and in view of that fact I ask to have read an article from the New York Journal of Commerce bearing upon this bill of the Finance Committee. Before having it read I wish to say that the men of the Northwest feel that we have been laboring under great disabilities and have not had fair recognition from the Committee on Finance of the United States Senate. For years bills have been pending before that committee to authorize small national banks throughout the country to loan a portion of their assets, a limited amount, upon real estate security, not upon real estate security in general, but upon improved, occupied farm property, at not to exceed one-third of the actual value of the property.

Throughout the Northwest-I am not familiar with the situation in the East-they regard that as the very best class of security which can be offered. I remember very well in 1893 and 1894, when we were in the midst of the panic, when a great many banks were in distress and quite a number of them suspended, that when a run was made on one of those country banks, the depositors being in a state of panic, the cashier in some instances would step forward and say, "My good friends, the money that you have deposited here we have loaned out. We could not afford to pay you 3 and 4 per cent interest unless we could loan our money out. We have loaned it out on first-class securities. We can not immediately respond to your certificates of deposit with cash, but here are first-class mortgages upon improved farms, farms of your neighbors, farms in your neighborhood." In all those instances the depositors would In all those instances the depositors would take those mortgages quicker than they would the cash.

I remember that some of the leading banks in St. Paul, banks which under ordinary conditions had an ample amount of money to loan, in those days had no money, and most of the money they had loaned out on what they called "personal security;" they could not collect it.

In the East you have a great many loans made on stock collateral, but out in the West, in the small country banks in the interior, nearly all personal loans are made by what they call "signers." A man goes to the bank to secure a loan. The "signers." A man goes to the bank to secure a loan. The banker says: "You must give me security. I can not take real estate." "Very well; I will get signers." He gets one or two of his neighbors to sign, and that is the security he offers. bank can not loan on real estate. But when a panic comes, when hard times come, all the bank has is that personal note; and if the maker of the note, be he one or many, can not respond, all the bank can do is to sue and put the note in judgment and, if those men have money, collect the money by execution in the ordinary way. If the bank has to collect it by realestate execution, there is a year of redemption in most of the Western States, and the result is that the bank gets no money when it most needs. That kind of security is not so good as real estate mortgage security. When you have real estate mortgage security you not only have the personal security of the signer, the maker of the note, but in addition you have a pledge of his farm.

I call attention to it in connection with this bill to show that the Committee on Finance is swift to grant certain relief to the moneyed interests here in the East, but when it comes to the matter of giving us throughout the West legislation in this matter I regret to say-and I say it in the utmost Christian spirit—we do not find the same responsive sympathy.

It is a very curious thing. In each instance these bills authorizing loans on real estate—and they have been Senate and House bills—have been referred to the present Secretary of the Treasury, who was once, I believe, a country banker. In his report upon the last bill, the House bill that came over, he made the statement that there are three classes of banking business. One is done by the commercial banks, the other by the savings banks, and the third by the loan and trust companies, and each of them has its particular functions. Because of that fact he is opposed to any law authorizing the national banks under any circumstances to loan on real estate.

The Secretary of the Treasury ought to know that in these small towns in the interior the banking business is not classified and divided in the manner he indicates. A town may have one or two or three banks. The banks have to do a general business. They not only have to do what is purely commercial business, such as the big banks in the large cities do, but they have to do what is known as savings-bank business-that is, take deposits from people and pay them a small rate of interest-and in addition to that they have to perform the function loan and trust companies. In other words, the three classes of business which in the large cities are classified and divided among different groups of institutions and banks in the smaller towns of the interior are all done by one bank.

So it is idle for the Secretary to say that this is the kind of business which ought to be given to a savings bank or to a loan and trust company and not to a national bank. What good does that do in the smaller towns where they have no savings banks and where they have no loan and trust companies and where they only have one kind of bank? I have been greatly surprised at the hostility which has been manifested against this kind of legislation. I refer to it for the purpose of comparing it with the eagerness and the energy and the swiftness with which the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] and those who agree with him aim to secure this legislation.

Now, here is an article from a New York newspaper giving a pretty fair diagnosis of this bill, which I ask that the Secretary of the Senate may be permitted to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Burrows in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE ALDRICH CURRENCY BILL.

The Secretary read as follows:

There is a disposition to attach more significance to the "currency" bill which Senator Aldrich is willing to vouchsafe before the session closes than really belongs to it. There is enough good in it to make its passage worth while, though it is pretty nearly offset by one positively bad provision. Its really useful feature is that which authorizes issuing gold certificates down to $10, though it might better have been $5, and allows the dividing up of silver certificates more completely into the small denominations; but this is accompanied by a provision for restoring one, two, and five-dollar Government notes, which is wholly findesirable as well as unnecessary. It is in the interest of perpetuating these mongrel credit notes, which ought to be kept in the higher denominations and gradually replaced with gold certificates. The "greenback" is no longer either necessary or excusable, and should "go" with the Sherman silver Treasury notes.

Permitting all Government receipts to be deposited in banks without distinction between customs and internal revenue does away with a long-standing absurdity, but it will have no practical effect. The internal-revenue receipts on the whole run rather above than below the customs receipts and furnish half the revenue of the Treasury. They afford many times the volume of funds in the course of the year that are deposited in banks, and under Secretary Shaw it has been the practice to turn all alike into the Treasury and to make no distinction in depositing in banks between the sources of the receipts. It is well to get rid of the distinction in law which no longer exists in practice, but it will not affect the volume of deposits.

There is a really useful provision in the amendment offered by Senator Nelsox, but Senator Aldrich would have nothing of that, apparently because it would be of some use. This, in two separate clauses of the amendment, provides that the public money deposited in the banks "shall at all times be subject to the draft and w

Mr. NELSON subsequently said: Mr. President, in connection with the remarks which I have heretofore made, I desire to have the letter which I hold in my hand read and incorporated therein. I am aware that upon this question I am not an expert; that I am only a plain farmer and a country lawyer; but I find that my views on this subject have been indorsed by a first-class banker, a banker with whom I think the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] is acquainted. I ask to have this let-ter read, as it relates to both propositions, the one as to the matter of loans on real estate and the other as to the matter of in-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. NELSON. And I ask that the letter may be incorporated with my remarks made in the outset.

VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission to have the letter inserted, as requested by the Senator from Minnesota, is granted.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE NATIONAL GERMAN-AMERICAN BANK, St. Paul, Minn., February 11, 1907.

Hon. Knute Nelson, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I promised to write you in regard to two bills you introduced relative to allowing national banks in small towns to take first improved farm mortgages and in regard to Government deposits.

After twenty-eight years' experience in banking, I am satisfied that both those bills have a great deal of merit. I had a bank in Wisconsin, a town of 3,000, fifteen years, and I kept at least 50 per cent of my deposits in improved first-class farm mortgages. It was a great convenience to the farmers, whom I allowed to pay always when they had good crops whether the note was due or not, and used to allow them, in case of sale, to take up their mortgages without regard as to whether they were due or not.

Commercial paper that is perfectly sound and good under all circumstances is not easily obtained in small towns like that, while improved farm mortgages are, as a general thing, always good. I never lost a dollar on one of my farm-mortgage loans.

I know from practical experience that that amendment of the national banking law, as to banks the size you speak of, should be granted, and it would be very beneficial to the farmers and very safe for the bank.

granteu, and it would be very beneficial to the farmers and very safe for the bank.

In regard to Government deposits, that is a very meritorious bill, and will do away with the complaint that is found of the Government gathering in so much money and having it idle. It also gives the United States Treasurer the privilege, when money is plenty, to call it in, as it is always subject to check, and there is no reason why the Government should not deposit such money in good, carefully managed banks and get 2 per cent, same as they do for State and county funds.

When it comes to the different bills that are being agitated for increase in the currency, I have very serious doubt. We have already about $34 per head—a very large per capita compared with other nations—and an increase would only exaggerate the present conditions of speculations, promotions, and extravagance; besides it is liable to impair the value of the 2 per cent Government bonds, which should be carefully guarded. I think if anyone wants to take out any more currency it should be done on 2 per cent Government bonds not to exceed a par value.

I should think a good while, if I were a Senator, before I would.

currency it should be done on 2 per cent dovernment exceed a par value.

I should think a good while, if I were a Senator, before I would favor any loose-jointed increase in the currency. I think the country can be relieved under your bill, allowing the United States Treasurer to make deposits in banks where the money is needed, then withdraw it when it is not needed; and our per capita is large enought—that would be my judgment.

I promised that I would write you a letter, and I had forgotten it for some time; just happened to think of it this morning.

Respectfully, yours,

J. W. LUSK, President.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, perhaps I ought to say a word in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota, that the Committee on Finance have not treated the Northwest fairly in their consideration of currency bills. What I understand to be the Northwest is very ably represented on that committee by its senior member, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison]; the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows], who is now occupying the chair; the Senator from Wisconsin on my left [Mr. Spooner], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Hansbrough], who is now absent from the Chamber.

We have had a number of discussions—I might say a great number of discussions-in that committee over the bill to which the Senator from Minnesota has alluded—that is, a proposition that the national banks should be permitted to loan on farm mortgages; and I will say that only one or perhaps two members of the committee agree with the Senator from Minnesota as to the desirability of that legislation. This is probably their misfortune, but certainly it is not because the Northwest is not represented on the committee or that there is any reason to suppose that the Northwest is particularly interested, as a section of the country, in the proposition.

The Committee on Finance considers all the questions that are referred to it by whatever Senator they may be offered in this body, as they believe, fairly and properly. They can not this body, as they believe, fairly and properly. would be an impossible condition that they should agree—with every Senator's views upon the currency question and questions relating to that subject. They do the best they can with those questions, and if they fail to respond to the views of other Senators it is not because those views do not receive consideration at the hands of the committee. Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, it might be that separated I would favor some of the provisions of the pending bill, but I am opposed to it in its entirety if so considered by the Senate. In the few moments, however, in which I shall submit some observations to the Senate I desire to address myself more particularly to that provision of the bill which changes the present law and authorizes the deposit of the customs receipts in the national banks of the country.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in his statement of January 29, 1907, shows that there was in the national-bank depositories money belonging to the United States on that day to the amount of $161,061,798.25. Mr. President, this large amount of money belonging to the people of the United States is placed in the national banks, and they loan it out in the course of their business to the people at such rates of interest as they are able to secure. The money of the people is therefore loaned to the people at a rate of interest, a thing in itself, in my judgment, unjustifiable and indefensible.

The proposition in the section to which I have invited attention is to go beyond this and to adopt a different rule from that which has heretofore existed, and to place an additional amount of money belonging to the people of the United States in the banks to be used for banking purposes, to wit, the customs receipts of the United States.

I am not advised particularly how much this will amount to, but I have been informed that it will reach the enormous sum of $300,000,000, which added to that which is there already will aggregate over $400,000,000 of public moneys to be used in the national banks.

The distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich], the chairman of the Finance Committee, presented, the other day, a statement showing that there will be a loss to the banks if they pay interest on these deposits. I shall not stop to argue that point, because if that be true, when all things are considered, the banks would not be anxious for the passage of the bill, as they appear to be now. The one fact stands out prominently that all the national banks of the country, as perhaps every Senator here knows, are anxious to be designated as Government depositories, not only to increase their prestige in the various communities in which they are established, but that they may reap a reward by loaning this money which already belongs to the people at such a rate of interest as may be exacted.

It is very well known, too, and there is nothing sectional in what I say, that the great bulk of this money belonging to the people now in the banks is in those banks at the monetary centers of the country, and it goes without saying that if the customs receipts are added, a still larger proportion will go into those particular banks.

I am in favor, particularly, of that amendment of the Senator from Minnesota which will require the national banks having this money on deposit to pay at least 2 per cent interest for it on average daily cash balances

There is one other thing, Mr. President, that I desire to say, and that is to emphasize the statement made the other day by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Berry], that we ought not to overlook the fact that the real cause of all this trouble, this congestion of money in the Treasury, is high taxes and extravagance on the part of the Government of the United States. know that we are a young people, a growing people, and an expanding people, and that necessarily our expenses will increase year by year; but there are items of increase in our expenditures each year which ought not to be there; and that, Mr. President, is the root of much of the evil in the conditions which exist to-day.

There is the colonial system, extravagant, expensive, profligate, which we have established, and which strikes at the very root and foundation of the Government which our fathers erected more than a hundred years ago. There is the increase in the expenses of the Navy and the Army on account of the war spirit which to a degree pervades the land. At this session alone we increased the expenditures of the Army more than $6,000,000 annually in the artillery arm of the service, and brigadier-generals on the retired list, for the purpose of increasing their pay, are almost as-Thick as autumnal leaves that strow the brooks In Vallombrosa.

The same is substantially true of the retired list of the Navy of the United States, padded out of proportion to merit, and intended chiefly to increase compensation by indirection.

Another cause of the unnecessary increase of our expenditures is that year by year, and especially under this Administration, we are reaching out in matters belonging to the States, seizing upon them as subject to Federal authority, and encroaching upon the rights of the States and the people, and thereby increasing to a great extent the expenses of the Federal Govern-

Another item of expense is the inexcusable multiplication of offices. There has not been, in the brief period in which I have served in this distinguished body, a single session of the Congress, I believe, but what wholly unnecessary offices have been created. They have been multiplied without excuse, without defense, and without justification. Not only that, Mr. President, but at every session of Congress, year by year, demands importunate and almost resistless have been made and acceded to to increase the salaries of the officials already in office.

So, I say, summing up the whole matter, in spite of the fact that our expenses will necessarily and naturally increase year by year, this expense, for the reasons I have enumerated, is increased out of proportion to the growth and needs of the country, and there ought to be a cessation of it.

noticed the statement in a newspaper the other day (how true it may be I am not at this moment advised) that in the past ten years the expenses of the Government have doubled. As I said, I do not know whether this is true or how far it may be from the real situation, but I want to put in the Record the increase of the expenses from 1903 to 1907, inclusive. At the expense of being somewhat tedious, I will read it, and yet it These totals are taken from the annual reports of is not long. the Secretary of the Treasury and embrace the total receipts and total expenses of the Government each year. I wish to call attention to the gradual increase and to the fact that within this period our expenses have increased more than $115,000,000. That is not all. The estimate of $818,690,643.68 for expenditures for 1908 is far short of the reality, for the chairman of a leading committee in another body advises us from his place and through the public prints that our expenditures that year will be a billion dollars rather than the sum estimated.

Now, what are these exact figures of which I have spoken? The revenues for 1903 were $694,621,117.64, and the expenditures were $640,323,450.28, showing a surplus, or an excess of taxation, of $54,297,667.36.

In 1904 the revenues were $684,214,373.74 and the expenditures that year were $725,984,945.65, leaving a deficit of $41,-

In 1905 the revenues were $697,101,269.95, larger than in previous years of this table. In the statement from which I am reading the expenditures for 1905 were $720,105,498.55, the deficit being $23,004,228.60.
In 1906 the revenues were $762,386,904.62—still increasing—and the expenditures were $736,717,582.01, leaving a surplus of

In 1907 the estimated revenues were $813,573,264-still increasing-while the expenditures were $755,573,264, leaving a surplus of $58,000,000.

The estimated revenues for 1908 are not given—at least none are accessible to me now-but the estimated appropriations for that year were $818,690,643.68; and yet we are told, as I said a moment ago, by a distinguished Member of another body, thoroughly conversant with the subject, that our expenditures, instead of being $818,000,000, will reach a billion dollars.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Rhode Island? Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Texas to the fact that while the expenditures of the Government have increased within the period he has named $115,-000,000, our revenue has increased $119,000,000. It is not a very bad condition, as a business proposition.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand that, Mr. President, but I am trying to impress upon the Senate the fact that by reason of high taxes, and extravagance upon the part of the Government as well, not only is this large amount of money being accumulated in the banks to be loaned out at interest by the national banks, but that the people are being, to a degree, oppressed even in these times of prosperity by an excessive collection of revenue from them, and I did not want the opportunity to pass without doing what I could in these brief remarks to the Senate to emphasize what was said a few days ago by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Berry], that the root of this evil is high taxes and extravagance, and that we ought to go to the bottom of it if we can.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield further to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. What remedy does the Senator from Texas

Mr. CULBERSON. Among other things, Mr. President, we can reduce the tariff, a proposition to which I suppose the Senator will not accede.

Mr. ALDRICH. By reducing the tariff I suppose the Senator means reducing customs duties?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.
Mr. ALDRICH. Which, if it would increase importations, would necessarily increase the revenue from customs?

Mr. CULBERSON. Not necessarily. It might have that effect.

Mr. ALDRICH. It would certainly, if it increased the im-

Mr. CULBERSON. It might have that effect, Mr. President, and the rate of taxation be lowered, but the Senator ought to have taken my entire statement that we ought to go further than that and reduce our expenditures, cut off our colonial expenses, cut down the expenditures of the Army and Navy, keep the Government of the United States within the bounds of the Constitution, not encroach upon the powers and the rights of the people and the States, and cease multiplying offices and increasing salaries.
Mr. ALDRICH.

Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield further to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes. Mr. ALDRICH. I have great sympathy with the Senator from Texas in some portion of his last remark, but I have not noticed that the Senator from Texas has used his eloquence for the last four or five days in trying to secure lower appropria-

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island will search my short record here in vain to find a single proposition which I have advocated or which I have introduced increasing the expenditures of the Government in the particulars to which I have just referred. One of the charges I make against the Republican party and the present Administration is that they have levied high taxes upon the people and squandered the money on so-called "colonial" possessions, on the Army and Navy, and have not expended it in domestic rather than foreign policies.

I suppose, Mr. President, the Senator has reference to some amendments which I have proposed to the river and harbor bill. I am in favor of that domestic policy. It is a policy which the Democratic party favors, and it would be far better if the Re-It is a policy which the publican party would cease spending the public money in the directions to which I have invited attention, would seek to build up the United States, to improve the harbors and rivers of the United States, and add to our domestic interests, and not endeavor with a "big stick" to intimidate and browbeat the nations of the earth and raise our reputation as a nation of power and of grandeur rather than a nation of peaceful and Christian methods.

Mr. President, that is all I intended to say, wishing simply to express my disapproval of this bill and to add what I might to the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Berry] the

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I am obliged to leave the Chamber to keep an engagement elsewhere, but as a member of the Committee on Finance, which very carefully considered this bill, although I am not an expert on the subject of finance, I wish to address the Senate very briefly as to the character of the bill and the reasons why, as one member of the committee, I gave it my approval.

I want to say to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] that I thought there was merit in the proposition which he submitted to the Senate and had referred to the Committee on Finance, and I was quite willing, for one, to vote in favor of it, with an amendment which, I think, would have been acceptable to him. But there was great difference of opinion in regard to it.

I do not look upon this bill, Mr. President, as in any proper sense a currency bill. It proposes no reorganization of the currency of the United States and no increase of the currency, except in one aspect of it, and no change in its basis whatever. business of the country has expanded almost ceivably within the last few years, and unless the blight of terror comes upon the financial interests of the country and upon the manufacturing interests of the country there is every reason to suppose that it will continue to expand. To me it is a perfectly plain proposition that sooner or later-and I think it perhaps must be sooner than later—the business interests of this country and the welfare of every class of our people will require a very thorough reorganization of the currency system. Experts differ as to what that should be. I have no definite plan as to it myself, but I am absolutely persuaded of its prospective necessity.

This bill provides for meeting a want, the existence of which no man can dispute, of a better supply of small notes in the country. That demand comes from all parts of the country, country. That demand comes from all parts of the country, and it is absolutely essential in some way, without changing the system, that the demand shall be met. This bill in a very simple way-and I want to observe that the committee worked under the necessity, perfectly apparent, of omitting from the measure all seriously controvertible propositions, and it was the purpose of the committee to make the bill and the propositions which it contained as simple as possible—the bill attempts to meet that want by authorizing the issue of-

United States notes of the denominations of $1, $2, and $5, and upon the issue of United States notes of such denominations an equal amount of United States notes of higher denominations shall be retired and

The limit now is $10. The law carefully provides in its operation-

That the aggregate amount of United States notes at any time outstanding shall remain as at present fixed by law.

No one, I think, can successfully impeach the wisdom of that

The next proposition contained in the bill, and one which has been somewhat controverted and also complicated by the amendment offered by my friend from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson], is in the new reading of section 5153 of the Revised Statutes. Under the law as it exists to-day, and as it has existed for a great many years—since 1864, I think—the Secretary of the Treasury has been empowered to deposit in such national banks as he designates as national depositories all moneys derived from the proceeds of sales of public property, as I recollect it, also that derived from internal-revenue taxes and from any source except customs.

The only change made in the law as it stands, and as has been explained, is to strike out the words "except customs." Now, Mr. President, that exception for a good many years has had no business in the law; it is an anachronism. It was inserted in the law in the beginning wisely. Then it was a necessity, because the customs dues were made payable in gold, and the main source of the gold supply of the Government was from customs receipts and was required to be disbursed in the payment of the interest on Government obligations at a time when they were issued mainly to aid in the preservation of the existence of the Government itself.

Mr. President, the country is now on the gold standard, and there is no more reason why the moneys derived from customs receipts should be excluded from this power given by law to the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit public money in public de-positories than there is for excluding internal-revenue money collected and other public moneys of the United States from being so deposited.

In the expansion of business it is almost a wicked thing to keep locked up in the Treasury, beyond the needs of the Gov-ernment, vast sums of money withdrawn from the channels of trade and commerce when every interest in the United States would be conserved by having it in circulation in one way and another, rather than under lock and key

Mr. President, in the deposit of the public moneys it is a mistake to suppose that the Secretary of the Treasury, acting under the present law, has deposited these moneys only in the banks of the great cities. I have in my hand here a report, from which, if Senators will look upon it, on page 99, and the succeeding pages, it will be found that there is not a State or a Territory in the Union in which there are not deposited considerable sums of money which is the money of the Government, although deposited in a Government depository

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SPOONER. I have only a few moments, and then I must leave; but I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but has it occurred to the Senator that the great bulk-I do not know exactly the proportion, but the great bulk-of our customs receipts are paid at the port of New York? Under the pending bill all those customs receipts would go directly into the national banks and very little of it would go into the interior banks, because customs receipts are not obtained at interior So that, instead of having that money distributed as it is now and scattered over the country, the result would be, under the operations of the bill, that it would pile up in the first instance in the big city banks.

Mr. SPOONER. Customs receipts, as I understand, Mr. President, go into the subtreasury at New York; they go into the subtreasury at Chicago; they go into other subtreasuries; and they are drawn upon by the Secretary of the Treasury and distributed by him throughout the United States. It does not

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me, at present the internal-revenue collectors can deposit the moneys they collect from day to day in national depositories, in national banks.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.
Mr. NELSON. The same thing will occur if you amend the existing law as you propose in reference to customs. lector of customs at the port of New York, instead of depositing the money in the subtreasury, will then deposit it in the national banks that are national depositories.

Mr. SPOONER Not at all Mr. President as August 1

Mr. SPOONER. Not at all. Mr. President, as I understand, the system in respect to that is not proposed to be changed, and the customs receipts will go into the subtreasuries

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no. Mr. SPOONER. At Boston, at New York, at Chicago, and at other places in the country. The collectors of customs will have no right to deposit these moneys in national banks which are That power is given to the Secretary of the public depositories. Treasury, and the money is deposited by the Secretary of the where he sees fit to send it and upon such arrange-Treasury ments made with the banks as to security as he may prescribe. That does not rest in the power of collectors of customs any more than it does in the power of collectors of internal revenue without change in the law not now proposed, as I understand it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin ield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SPOONER. I have only a moment-

Mr. NEWLANDS. I only wish to ask a question. Mr. SPOONER. Very well. Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator question as to whether or not the method of doing business under the proposed law with reference to customs receipts would not be the same as now prevails regarding internal-revenue receipts? I do not understand that internal-revenue receipts are paid into the subtreasury at all. They are paid by the collectors of internal revenue into the banks that are designated as public depositories, and I imagine that the same method would be pursued in regard to customs receipts.

Mr. SPOONER. That depends altogether, Mr. President, upon the order of the Secretary of the Treasury; not upon the col-There is no option whatever in the collectors of customs or the collectors of internal revenue. In other words, these are public moneys. They are public moneys, Mr. President, in the subtreasuries and in the Treasury here; they are public moneys in every national depository, and they are as completely subject to the order of the Secretary of the Treasury when in such depositories as they are here in the Treasury or in any of the subtreasuries.

The relation of the Government to its moneys is not changed at all by their deposit in public depositories. The relation of debtor and creditor, which arises from a general deposit in a bank by an individual, does not arise ever under the present system between the Government of the United States and a national depository. The courts have held that moneys deposited by the Secretary of the Treasury in a national depository are in contemplation of law still in the Treasury of the United States. It is a national depository, and the money is placed with a fiscal agent of the Government, bound under the law as one of the conditions of deposit that it shall perform, at the instance of the Secretary of the Treasury, such duties as a fiscal agent as he may prescribe. Therefore it works and has worked, so far as that is concerned, just as if these moneys deposited in the depositories were in the Treas--the principal Treasury or the subtreasuries.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will pardon me, I have but a few moments.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I merely want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that, in addition to what he says, the banks are required to transmit money from the point of receipt to the subtreasury, wherever it may be located.

Mr. SPOONER. I thank the Senator. That is so, too. If Senators will look over this report as to the distribution of public money throughout the States and Territories of the United States, I think they will be satisfied that in this distri-bution there has been, all things considered, the utmost of impartiality. Not long ago when the interest rates, brought about in one way and another, were very high in the city of New York, and there seemed almost danger of a panic and necessity for loosening somewhat the flow of money by taking some from the Treasury and distributing it throughout the country, the Secre-tary made an order that the banks in the West, in which he largely deposited this money, should not send it to New York to be loaned at those high rates of interest or used for speculative

Why should the money be kept in the Treasury? Twice a year the great volume of the customs receipts come in—in the spring and in the fall-and those are the periods of the year when in the North and the South and the East and the West there is occasion for more money among cattle growers, cotton growers, and farmers than at any other two periods of the year. I have never been able to see, Mr. President, any reason why with our expanding business moneys which would serve the whole people being in the currents of trade and which may safely, with reference to the interests of the Government, be allowed to circulate through the channels of trade and commerce, should be locked up in the Treasury or the subtreasury of the United States. The time when that was important has gone by.

Mr. President, as to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota—and I have known him longer than I have known any other man, perhaps, in the Senate, and I know his sincerity, and I have the profoundest respect for his judgment—I can not see that it would be wise, for two or three reasons, to adopt the amendment which he proposes. The Senator from Minnesota thinks that this money should be deposited in the banks at interest, and it is said that the Government moneys deposited in banks, moneys belonging to the people, is used and loaned at interest to the people by the banks. If it were not deposited in the banks, if it were kept in the Treasury, it would produce no interest for the people; and my view as to the importance of depositing the moneys on call, so far as the Secretary of the Treasury thinks it wise, in banks, is not for the interest at all of the banks, but for the interest of the business of the United States and every department of the business of

Mr. President, I have not been able to see that the relation which a State sustains to the banks to which it loans its money is precisely or much like the relation which the Government sustains to Government depositories. The banks in which the moneys of the State are deposited are not the fiscal agents of The object of the State is to loan its money to the the State. banks and derive some income from its money for the people; but it creates the relation of debtor and creditor. It is a call loan, or the money may be loaned for a specific time, and, as a rule, as I remember, it is very often without security. It is loaned upon personal bonds, which, however good they may be at other times, are not good in a time of panic. Suit may be brought upon them and recovery had, but, although the obligor of the bond may be perfectly good, it takes time to collect it.

I would be sorry, as I am now advised-I might on a fuller discussion feel differently about it-to have the Government of the United States change its relations to its money. To-day the money deposited in these banks is still the money of the

the United States.

Mr. NELSON. But, Mr. President—— Mr. SPOONER. But if interest is charged upon it, it is not. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Whose money is it after the bank has had it Mr. NELSON. and loaned it out to the stockjobbers? Is it still the money of Mr. SPOONER. The Senator talks about stockjobbers. I suppose there will always be some stockjobbers. I do not suppose, Mr. President, so long as the world lasts, that the element of gambling and speculation, which is not confined to the cities, but is everywhere and is implanted more or less in mankind, will probably ever be much curtailed. But this money is scattered all over the United States.

Mr. NELSON. But, Mr. President, waiving the question about the stock gamblers, whose money is it after the banks have loaned it out?

Mr. SPOONER. It is the money of the United States if they loan it out.

Mr. NELSON. If they loan it out to the public at large, do you get back that same money?

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I am not here to say that the banks may loan it out. It may, being on deposit there, loosen money, which they would not wish to loan but for the Government deposits of Government money. But the notion of charging a fiscal agent of the Government of the United States interest on the Government's own money in his custody, liable to be drawn upon at any minute, seems to me an odd one.

Mr. President, I think Senators, if they propose to change the system and put the Government in the attitude occupied by some of the States of loaning its money and making the bank its creditor instead of its agent, had better take more time for the consideration of it than is afforded by the discussion upon this measure at this stage of the session. One thing seems to me clear enough, and that is that this exception should be stricken out of the law.

Mr. President, a word more about this phase of it. The amendment of my friend from Minnesota contains a provision which would be a wise one if the policy of the Government is to be, so far as the disposition of the public moneys is concerned, what the policy of the State is in loaning its money or depositing it in banks at interest, purely to secure interest. That I am opposed to. I do not like the idea of the Government loaning its money. I do not like the principle of it. will come a demand after a while, if that be done, that the loans shall not be confined to national banks.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator will pardon me. I must keep an appointment. I have only four or five minutes.

Mr. NELSON. I merely wish to ask a question. What law is there—can the Senator refer to any law—which authorizes the national banks to loan out at interest the Government money on deposit with them?

Mr. SPOONER. I can not. Mr. NELSON. If that is the Government's money which they loan out and from which they derive a profit, does not the profit belong to the United States? It is Government money.

Mr. SPOONER. That is another proposition. If the Senator will read the case of United States v. Hartwell, I think perhaps he will find an answer to his question.

But the Senator's amendment is well drawn upon the theory on which it is based. It is so drawn as to secure the largest amount of interest-I do not mean per cent, but in the aggregate—that is possible. Therefore the Senator from Minnesota wisely, if he is right, inserts in his amendment a provision which I should very much dislike to see placed in any enactment by Congress governing the disposition of Government funds, and that is this:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall not allow the public money in the Treasury permanently to accumulate over and above a safe and reasonable working balance required for the current demands upon the Government; and any surplus over and above such working balance shall, from time to time, when practicable, be deposited by the Secretary of the Treasury in the national banking associations designated and qualified as receivers and depositories of public money as aforesaid.

Mr. President, the banks of the United States-the national banks, and I might almost, if not quite, say the State banks-are like ninepins. When panic comes and one falls, the others begin one after the other to totter. There is not a bank of any consequence in the United States, State or national, which does not keep in the great money centers a balance to its credit. The financial situation is one that is ever changing, and the factors which lead to change in it are often not factors arising in this country or subject at all to our control. Sometimes when we think everything is moving along smoothly, something happens abroad to frighten capital. It has happened within a year. It is liable to happen again, and whether it is the result of gambling, whether it is the result of the demand of the manufacturers whose business is expanding, whether it comes from the demands of the railroad companies, which are obliged to borrow vast sums in order to meet and discharge their duties to the public, there come times, and they come perhaps too often, when if it were not in the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to afford some relief here or there, where the situation is acute and where it is greatly and immediately needed, there would be panie in the country; not panie simply affecting New York, not panic simply affecting speculators, but panic affecting the manufacturing interests of the country, the cattle interests of the country, the cotton interests of the country, the agricultural interests of the country, all the business interests of the country, labor included.

Those times will come again, and I should feel it was placing the financial situation in a condition of danger to deprive the Secretary of the Treasury of all elasticity in the management of Government deposits. If you require him to keep on deposit all at once-on call, of course, as it would be-all the public money except the working balance required for daily, for weekly, or for monthly use, his resources are gone; and if for some reason-and there may be many-there comes a time when relief from the Treasury, which is partly financial and partly moral, is greatly needed, he can not afford it, for all the money will have, in obedience to the command of Congress, been taken from the Treasury and deposited in the banks at interest.

I am told at the Comptroller's office—and I can not take the time to elaborate it, but I believe it to be true-that if the Congress should adopt this provision creating new depositories and depositing the moneys at interest, the practical operation of it would be that the banks in the interior-I mean the smaller banks, not the great banks, but the average of the banks of the country, except the new banks which want the decoration "Gov-ernment depository" for prestige and credit, banks just starting out-would not take any of this money, and it would go to the great money centers where the interest rate is for the time being very high. I do not believe, although I can not take the time to go through it, that it is a wise scheme of legislation, and I should dislike to see it adopted.

Mr. President, there is only one other thing in this bill, and that is the provision which authorizes the retirement of $9,000,000 a month of national-bank notes instead of the present limitation of $3,000,000 a month. That is necessary in the public interest. There are times in the year-twice, in the spring and in the fall-when the banks can make money on the circulation. The balance of the year as a rule they can not, and the time during which they can make money is so short compared with the time during which they can not make money that they will not take out circulation at all, because under the existing law they can not retire it.

As the Senator from Rhode Island stated to the Senate the other day, the $3,000,000 a month limitation in its relation to the aggregate circulation, excluding gold bullion and gold coin, when it was enacted into the statute, is a little bit less in percentage than the $9,000,000 a month will be applied to the outstanding circulation, excluding gold bullion and gold coin.

Mr. President, it has seemed to me—and I am obliged to leave—that the bill is a simple one; that it is a needed bill. There is nothing of innovation in it. It does not change the relation of silver to our currency. It does not enlarge the use of United States notes, and we supposed that it would be practically unopposed because plain, simple, and needed.

The amendment of the Senator from Minnesota also provides for a different class of securities which the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to accept. Some of the securities re-Treasury is authorized to accept. ceived by savings banks would not be very good securities to be held by the Government. I do not mean by that that they would not be intrinsically valuable and adequate security.

Most of the savings banks reserve the right to require ninety days' notice. But the value of a security to a bank does not consist simply of the value of the property upon which it is based, but it consists also of the ability to market it quickly.

You may take a million dollars' worth of municipal bonds. I do not care how good they are. They may be as good as any security on earth. Yet in amount they are so small that there is no market for them. You can not put them on the market and order them sold without a loss. You have to hunt a purchaser for them, and in that respect they are very different-I am speaking of the power to market them and sell them quickly without loss—from a large issue of securities which come to be well known, which are bought and sold every day. The Secretary of the Treasury could not very well hold real estate mortgages, although based upon lands of a thousand times the value, because they are not salable as bonds are

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me a question?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.
Mr. NELSON. Does not the Senator think it would be wiser for us to prescribe by legislation what kind of securities shall be taken, instead of leaving it to the conscience and notion of the Secretary

Mr. SPOONER. I hardly think so.
Mr. NELSON. Do you think the present plan of the Secretary doing it without any law is better?

Mr. SPOONER. Every time that question comes to the Senate there will be amendments and debate, as there were before, which killed the bill, as to this class of securities and that class of securities. The law as it is written upon the statute book is the law which has been in force, inapt as it may be, since this system was adopted. No money has ever been lost through the acceptance by any Secretary of the Treasury of inadequate security, and for myself I would rather leave it—I think the statute does leave it—to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

I think words "and otherwise" mean something. the Secretary of the Treasury is entirely within the law in what he has done. But I would rather leave it to a Secretary of the Treasury, one of the most important officers in any Administration, who is constantly informed as to the value of this security and that-I do not mean its inherent value alone, but its prompt salability—to take the security which he deems to be best than to attempt to tie him down by some bill of particulars as to the securities enacted in a statute. That is my own judgment about it.

Mr. President, I have imperfectly presented this matter, but must leave the Chamber.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, if I understand the purpose of this bill, it is to increase the amount of money in circulation and to increase the elasticity of that circulation. Am I right in that, I will ask the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not to increase the amount of money, but to give it greater flexibility.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator will observe that I did not state that the purpose of the bill was to increase the amount of money, but to increase the amount of money in circulation. Is that one of the main purposes of the bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. I assume that the effect of an additional issue of ones, twos, and fives, and reducing the minimum denomination of gold certificates from twenty to ten dollars will be to give more fluidity and possibly greater circulation to the money already in existence.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand, therefore, that the Senator from Rhode Island regards it as a desirable thing to increase the circulation of money

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly. Mr. CULBERSON. Doubtless the Senator's attention has already been called to it, but still I remind him that by section 4 of the bill the amount of money can be reduced further than heretofore, the limit now being $3,000,000 a month, and it is proposed to increase this limit to $9,000,000 a month under the fourth section of the bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will say, in answer to the statement of the Senator from Texas, whilst it is true that this bill provides that national-bank circulation can be diminished at the rate of $9,000,000 a month, whereas under existing law it can be diminished at the rate of only $3,000,000 a month, yet I understand the purpose of the Senator from Rhode Island in urging this change is to promote an increase in bank currency by doing away with the present rigid system which compels a bank, when its circulation is once issued, to keep it out even though that circulation be unprofitable. So I think I am correct in saying that the main purpose of the bill is to increase the money in circulation, and that the Committee on Finance of the Senate deems that a desirable end.

SMALLER DENOMINATIONS.

The first two sections of the bill relate simply, I believe, to the denominations of gold certificates and of greenbacks. Under the law as it now stands no gold certificate under $20 can be issued. It is proposed to make the minimum $10, and it is expected that this will increase, as the Senator from Rhode Island says, the fluidity of the money and in that way promote its circulation. So also with reference to the greenbacks; it is provided in section 2 that when the Secretary of the Treasury deems that the smaller denominations of United States silver certificates are not sufficient to meet the requirements of business he is permitted to issue greenbacks in denominations less than $5, and it is expected that that will have a similar effect.

Under the law as it now stands the purpose was to confine all the smaller denominations of money to silver certificates. Under the law as proposed the smaller denominations can be increased by dividing up the greenbacks, and the gold certificates can be diminished from $20 to $10. I see nothing objectionable in these features, for I have no doubt that business conditions demand more of the smaller denominations than are now in issue.

ENLARGED USE OF SILVER.

I also believe that at this very time there is such a demand for smaller denominations that some wise provision should be made for the gradual increase of the silver in our currency; and I will ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether he does not think that some use of silver can be made without endangering the gold standard and simply with a view to meeting the demand of the country for more of the smaller denominations of money?

Mr. ALDRICH. Of course the question of the Senator from Nevada opens a very wide field. I will say that there has been a large and, I think, an increasing demand for silver half dollars, and I believe the Mint is now coining a large amount of these coins and the Secretary is buying silver for that purpose. I think this policy meets with general approval, because anything which adds to the convenience of the business public or the public generally in the way of small notes or silver coinage meets with public approbation.

But if the Senator from Nevada means whether we should resume the purchase of silver bullion for the purpose of coining it into standard silver dollars, I should have to reply to him that I do not think it is expedient to reenter upon that policy. I think if we should undertake to complicate this bill by a reopening of the silver question in all its parts, we certainly would not be able to secure any legislation at this and possibly not at the next session.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have not now in view such an issue. I simply wished to get the opinion of the Senator from Rhode Island as to whether we could not moderately increase the use of silver in this country, and thus bring about a gradual approximation to the old parity between silver and gold without endangering the gold standard, to which the Senator from Rhode Island is devoted.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think we can largely increase the use of silver in half dollars and in quarters, and my own personal belief is that the Treasury Department has delayed too long in furnishing to the public the amount of subsidiary silver coinage which the country demands.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand that the Secretary of the Treasury has announced that he would have to coin at least $5,000,000 a year for five years in silver.

Mr. TELLER. Five million dollars? Mr. NEWLANDS. Five million dollars. Mr. TELLER. What denominations? Mr. NEWLANDS. Subsidiary coins.

I will ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether in his judgment a larger amount of silver can not be coined and whether it would not simply meet the existing requirements of the country?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is a very difficult question for me to answer. I will say there has been a demand for half dollars, which has not been met. Just how large that demand has been and just what additional quantity would be required I am not myself in a position to state. I think that whatever the country demands it should have, and I think the Treasury Department should purchase the silver bullion and coin it into half dollars and silver quarters to the extent which the public demand requires

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am sorry that in view of this some provision has not been made in the pending bill-

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not necessary.
Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator says it is not necessary. It is now purely in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, but I think the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury ought to be instructed upon this subject by Congress. now gradually approaching the old parity. Silver has risen from about 50 cents to over 70 cents an ounce, I believe 75 cents an ounce. All this increase has taken place while certain silver-standard nations have been going to the gold standard. I imagine that this country takes the view that it is desirable that the old parity should be restored.

INTERNATIONAL BIMETALISM.

In 1900 when Congress passed the bill providing for the gold standard, in the last section, section 14, it was provided:

SEC. 14. That the provisions of this act are not intended to preclude the accomplishment of international bimetallism whenever conditions shall make it expedient and practicable to secure the same by concurrent action of the leading commercial nations of the world and at a ratio which shall insure permanence of relative value between gold

That was in the year 1900, long after we passed through the crucial campaign of 1896, and the Congress of the United States deemed the matter of international bimetallism, the restoration of parity between silver and gold, of sufficient importance to put in the act this section, announcing the ultimate purpose of the United States, with the concurrence of other nations, to restore international bimetallism,

Mr. President, there can be no better way of accomplishing international bimetallism than to gradually raise the value of silver in the markets of the world and bring it approximately to its old value of $1.29 an ounce. Unaided silver has already advanced in a few years nearly 50 per cent in value. The world has not had enough money; the United States has not enough money, notwithstanding the fact that within ten years we have increased our metal stock in this country 100 per cent. Our total stock of gold and silver in 1896 was $1,000,000,000. now over $2,000,000,000, the increase coming almost entirely Yet to-day New York is suffering for want of money. from gold. The hunger for money has drifted from the West, where it existed ten years ago, to the great financial centers of the East. The Senator from Rhode Island only a few years ago introduced a bill in this body intended to give financial relief, intended to increase the amount of money in circulation, and the very reason of his urgency was a threatened panic, which he predicted and which subsequently occurred in New York City; a panic among the rich, it is true, a panic caused by the flotation of large quantities of securities which the existing volume of money was not able to sustain. So the Senator from Rhode Island, who was entirely deaf to the opinion of the West ten years ago, responded to the cry of New York and was the most prominent advocate upon the floor of this body for an increase in the volume of money.

THE QUANTITATIVE THEORY.

We were told in 1896 that quantity was not an element to be considered in the money question; that all we should have regard for was quality, for if our dollars were only of good quality, regardless of their number, confidence and credit would do the rest and our money system would be perfect. Now, although we have added to the five or six hundred million dollars of gold which we had ten years ago $1,000,000,000, though the metal in stock has in ten years increased from $1,000,000,000 to $2,000,000,000, we are told by that Senator who insisted in 1896 that quality was the only essential that quantity is the essential thing now and that there is not a sufficient quantity.

Mr. President, I am glad to hear the Senator from Rhode Island make the statement that more silver can be used and that more silver ought to be used and that the Treasury partment is to be censured for not using more under the discretion given to it by the law, for I shall hope for results. shall hope that the subsidiary coinage of this country, instead of being increased at the rate of $5,000,000 a year, will be increased at the rate of $10,000,000 a year, and that this country, the greatest producer of silver in the world, will be doing something for the first time in ten years to give stability of value to a money metal whose value was mainly lessened by the action of the country most interested in its production, and that country is the United States, the greatest producer of silver in the world.

NATIONAL DEPOSITORIES.

But, Mr. President, the important provisions of the bill now under consideration are sections 3 and 4. The main purpose of section 3 is to make designated national banks the depositories not only of money received from internal revenue, as at present, but of money received from customs. The money received from internal revenue amounts to about $300,000,000 a year, and the money received from customs amounts to the same. The money received from internal revenue does not go, I understand, into the subtreasury, though the Senator from Wisconsin insisted that it did.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The money collected from internal revenue may be paid into national depositories, but these banks must remit to some subtreasury. All the Government receipts in effect go into the Treasury. Then the Secretary of the Treasury disposes of them according to law, but with discretion as to what leaves the shell select for density other than customs redepositories he shall select for deposits other than customs receipts and to what amount.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Do I understand that at present the course is that internal-revenue receipts collected are deposited in the first place with the national banks designated as depositories and then the money is immediately transmitted to the subtreasury?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is right.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Can not that money be kept by the bank?

Mr. ALDRICH. No. Mr. NEWLANDS. Then I was mistaken. I had supposed that these moneys were deposited in national banks as depositories and were subject there to the check of the National Government.

Mr. President, I entirely approve of any system which will prevent the contraction of the money of the country by locking it up. When we lock $150,000,000 in the United States Treasury, we practically destroy its efficiency as money. Money is useful in exchange or as reserves in banks, and money locked up in the Treasury can not be so used; it is so much dead I therefore favor a system which keeps this money out among the people, a system which never withdraws it from the people. We all know that the best way of keeping it among the people is to keep it in the banks, just as all business men do, and it is the wise thing for the Government to engage in the system of depositing these moneys in the banks and of checking them out in the ordinary course of business, just as any business man would do.

SECURITY FOR NATIONAL DEPOSITS.

The question, however, remains as to security for the money. That has been provided for by the existing act, I believe, regarding United States depositories. It is met by the existing act by the "deposit of United States bonds and otherwise," and the term "otherwise" has been recently interpreted to mean that the Secretary of the Treasury has unlimited discretion as to the security which he can accept. The committee, therefore, leave those words as they stand and the Senator from Minnesota insists upon it that the securities should be specified.

Mr. President, I think that is subject to the objection made

Mr. President, I think that is subject to the objection made by the Senator from Wisconsin, that if we start in the work of designating these various securities we are likely to get into considerable confusion, and that for that reason it is better to leave it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. But it does seem to me that there ought to be some provision in the law compelling the Secretary of the Treasury upon the 1st of January in each year, by public notice, to state what bonds and securities will be accepted for these deposits.

Ist of January in each year, by public notice, to state what bonds and securities will be accepted for these deposits.

I would not subject the Secretary of the Treasury to the temptation of an individual transaction which may test his integrity. I would have him act under some general rule, published to the entire world, subject to the scrutiny of the entire financial world. If that is done, I believe that he will place in his list only such securities as are absolutely good, and if we compel him by law to make such a statement on the 1st of January of each year it necessarily means a constant revision of the list, the weeding out of poor securities and the substitution of good.

Now, Mr. President, the next question is as to where these public moneys shall be deposited. Is the Secretary of the Treasury to be given unlimited discretion as to these deposits? That is an enormous power, a power which might be used to his personal advantage, a power which might be used to the advantage of particular banks or particular communities or particular sections. It is true that when moneys are paid into the Government at New York for customs the money is paid out probably from some existing bank, and it would only seem fair, perhaps, that the moneys which are received from the community of New York should be deposited in some bank there, and that the moneys which are received in the community at San Francisco should be deposited in some bank there. But it must be recollected that the customs receipts, while paid out of the banks in the great ports of entry, come from the entire country, and the man who has a shipment of goods made to him in Chicago has to provide the funds there from which to pay the entry duty at New York, and he has to arrange his credits accordingly.

WITHDRAWAL OF NOTE CIRCULATION.

Mr. President, as to the last section, which authorizes the withdrawal of national-bank circulation in an amount not exceeding $9,000,000 a month, I have to say there is great force in the contention that these bank notes are required for emergencies. They are required to move the crops. They are useful, perhaps, for three, six, or nine months in the year, and then perhaps useless.

The reason why Congress put in the limitation in withdrawal of $3,000,000 was that it did not wish to give the banks the power to quickly contract the currency. We had an illustration of this power in 1893, when, under the direction of Mr. Cleveland, an object lesson was given to the western people, then urging the free coinage of silver as a means of increasing the money volume, by the eastern banks, which withdrew their credits simply with a view to bringing about such conditions as would force what they regarded as needed legislation. We do not therefore wish to give such power to the banks, but it does seem to me that there ought to be some proportion between the amount of withdrawal and the amount in circulation. If we have $300,000,000 in bank notes in circulation and we permit the banks to withdraw only at the rate of $3,000,000 a month, when we have $600,000,000 of notes in circulation it is hardly fair to hold them down to $3,000,000 a month. Three million dollars is 1 per cent of $300,000,000. One per cent of $600,000,000 is $6,000,000 a month.

It seems to me, therefore, that a better rule to establish would be not to provide a fixed amount that can be retired every month, but to give the banks the power simply to retire to the extent of 1 per cent of the aggregate of their circulation, whatever it may be. The aggregate circulation of the country to-day in bank notes is about $600,000,000. Five or six years ago it was only about $300,000,000. One per cent of $600,000,000 would be $6,000,000. It seem to me that this would be a much fairer rule. If, then, the bank-note circulation of the country should diminish to $300,000,000, we should permit them to retire only at the rate of 1 per cent, or $3,000,000, per month. If it should rise to $1,000,000,000, as it may, we should then allow them to retire the same percentage, or $10,000,000,000, per month. It appears to me to be entirely illogical to put in a fixed amount that can be withdrawn every month and entirely logical to provide that the amount of withdrawal shall bear a certain proportion to the aggregate in circulation.

BANK RESERVES.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to say one word regarding the reserves of these banks. We have a system which crowds all the reserves of all the national banks of the country in New York City. That seems to me to be a vicious system, because it collects from every part of the country moneys to be used simply in speculation. When the moneys are needed in the West and in the South a contraction of the volume of money is caused in New York, and we have the stock panics which may at any time be so large in their proportion as to involve bank panics in New York and resulting bank panics throughout the United States.

Now, let us see how much of these reserves can be placed in New York. There are sixteen reserve cities provided for by the national banking act. National banks in these cities are required to keep 25 per cent of their deposits in cash, but they are allowed to deposit one-half of such cash in banks in New York City and no other city. New York is the central reserve city in the United States. The result is that all of these national banks in the sixteen reserve cities may really have only cash reserves of 12½ per cent, provided they deposit the remaining 12½ per cent in the national banks of New York City.

Then, how is it with the other cities that are not reserve cities, the country banks, the banks of the smaller cities? They are compelled by law to keep a reserve of 15 per cent. They must have reserves equal to 15 per cent of their deposits. But they are permitted to deposit three-fifths of their supposed cash reserve in the reserve cities. The result is that under the law the national banks of the smaller cities are compelled to keep on hand only 6 per cent of their deposits, and the remaining three-fifths of the 15 per cent may be deposited in the reserve cities, and then the national banks in the reserve cities can deposit one-half of these moneys in the New York City banks under the system to which I have referred.

DRIFT OF RESERVES TO NEW YORK.

So the tendency is to deposit in New York one-half of all the reserves of all the national banks of the United States. It seems to me that is an unfair advantage to give to New York. It has the effect of building up New York at the expense of her great commercial rivals. It is not fair to Boston; it is not fair to Philadelphia; it is not fair to Baltimore, or to Richmond, or to Atlanta, or to New Orleans, or to San Francisco.

When you add to these enormous reserves deposited in the New York banks the command of the life-insurance moneys of the country, you can see how the entire financial system of the country is made to play into the hands of New York and to promote this speculation, which has been breeding panics year after year.

It is this system of crowding the cash reserves of the national banks of the entire country into New York that has led to this overcapitalization of railroad securities, of trust securities, of watered stocks and bonds, that have been placed upon the entire public, and upon which the public are compelled to pay interest and dividends.

But, in addition to this, the system withdraws from every section of the country money that is actually needed there for safety. What system of banking is that which will permit the banks of the smaller cities to move along on a cash reserve of only 6 per cent of their deposits? Safe banking throughout the country requires from 20 to 25 per cent. We insist that the national banks of New York City should have at least 25 per cent of their deposits in cash reserves; we insist upon the banks in reserve cities having at least 12½ per cent, while we permit these smaller banks to have only 6 per cent to meet the demands of their depositors in times of stress. Then when the time of stress comes and they apply to the banks in the great reserve cities and these banks apply to the banks in the central reserve city of New York for money actually deposited there, they are met with the answer that cash can not be forthcoming; that stock panics will ensue, and resort is then made to clearing-house certificates to discharge the obligations of these great central banks.

INCREASE OF RESERVES IN COUNTRY BANKS.

Mr. President, it would, of course, revolutionize the banking system of the country if we should attempt to make too radical a change at once in this particular, but I think it is only reasonable to provide in this very bill that hereafter the actual cash to be maintained by these country banks and by these reserve city banks, outside of the central city of New York, shall be increased at the rate of 1 per cent per annum until we shall have finally a system that will compel the country banks to hold four-fifths of their required reserve of 15 per cent in actual cash in their vaults to meet the demands of their depositors; and that will compel the reserve city banks to keep 25 per cent of actual cash in their vaults to meet the demands of their depositors. If we do this we shall have a safe and sound banking system, and not a banking system that simply aids the promotion of speculation in the country, with its accompanying stock and bank panics.

Mr. President, I do not know that I shall have the time or the skill in the time to be given to this debate to prepare the amendments which I have outlined. I think that whilst we are considering the bill we ought to perfect it; that we ought to perfect our national banking system, and not only provide that the money now constituting the money volume of the country shall be more fluid, but that we shall also provide more security for the depositors, and thus add to the stability of enterprise and of prices throughout the entire country.

DEMOCRATIC CONTENTIONS OF 1896.

But I can not close without pointing out the fact that this very bill, and the argument on which it is based, simply confirms the Democratic contention of 1896 as to the quantitive theory We insisted then that with the increase of population and business more money was required to make the exchanges just as more freight cars were required to transport the products exchanged. The demand was met in an unexpected way by the increased production of gold. Yet now, though our per capita circulation has increased from $22 to $32. we find that the increase of business and production has created a demand for more money, which even the vastly increased production of gold can not meet. Thus time is vindicating all the demands for reform legislation and all the economic contentions which we made in 1896.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I will not take three min-utes in what I shall say on this bill to-day, for I gave an expression of my opinion about it the other day

There are two important changes in this bill, and only two. The first change, Mr. President, as I understand, is simply a matter of a change in the denominations. So far, therefore, as it affects that portion of the present law whereby the gold certificates are to be changed, each twenty to two tens, we do not affect the volume of the currency in the slightest degree; we do not expand the currency or contract it by this method.

The next section is not one, Mr. President, intended to expand the currency in any way. It is simply to relieve certain banks or certain sections of the country by providing that a sum of from about $300,000,000 to $400,000,000 that otherwise would be paid first to the Treasury and by it often paid back to those banks shall reach the same banks in a little different method and a more direct way.

Mr. President, we all agree upon one proposition, that no more money should be retained in the Government vaults than is absolutely necessary to safely conduct the business of the Government. I believe that every Senator will be in accord on that proposition.

It is said, Mr. President, that this measure is for the relief of trade; that it is not for the relief of a particular bank. I want to see if it is really for the relief of trade, and if so, for what kind of trade; whether it is for the relief of particular banksthose of New York or Boston and other seaports. The amount of money that is to be required in any section of the country will always be determined beforehand by a certain and positive index; and whenever we desire to know whether there is a stringency in the money market in any particular part of the Union, we ascertain that by the index of the rate of interest. The index of the rate of interest in New York is fluctuating. As a rule; year in and year out the rate is probably as low there as it is in any other section of the United States. It is only at special periods that it rises enormously to meet demands for speculation that is rife at all times in that city.

So we can not blind our eyes, Mr. President, to the fact that heretofore, again and again, about once or twice a year the Treasury Department goes to the relief not of the West, not of the section of country out in the agricultural portions, but always to that section of the country which is sustained by the gambling in stocks and securities in the great cities of the United States. Ever so often we are compelled to supply millions upon millions of money to prevent a panic in a certain section of the country. Now, the people of the country have got tired of the nation coming to the relief and the upholding ever so often of stock speculation. Then comes the demand for an expansive or an elastic currency.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. BACON. I want to call the attention of the Senator to what I supposed was a lapsus lingua on his part. The Senator certainly does not mean to say that boards of trade in the various cities are gambling institutions.

Mr. McCUMBER. I refer to certain dealings upon stock

Mr. BACON. The Senator means stock boards, does he not? Boards of trade are very different things from stock boards.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is correct. Mr. BACON. I thought I would give the Senator an opportunity to correct his mistake in that regard.

Mr. McCUMBER. Gambling in stocks creates this excessive demand for currency. It is necessary to have that currency for the purpose of upholding these stocks until they can be again loaded onto the public. That is the history of the demand that has been made upon the Treasury for loans for the last six or eight years.

Now we find a more simple and a more easy method, and that is, Mr. President, that this $400,000,000 that heretofore went directly to the Treasury goes to those banks of deposit and swells their deposits to the extent of $400,000,000 a year. Then the Secretary of the Treasury may call for those amounts as he may demand. In no instance will he use a greater amount than is necessary to conduct the business of the country, and only those banks in those sections of the country will receive the benefit of this deposit.

But they say it is necessary for the moving of our crops. it is necessary for the moving of the crops during the fall of the year in the agricultural sections of the country, why is it, then, that we will not have the deposits nearest to where those crops are marketed? How is it going to help us particularly in the removal of the crops that the deposits are made in the spring of the year, when the gambling sentiment is certainly at its height, to help out these eastern banks? The amount of money to remove the crops is necessary only in the fall of the year, and, Mr. President, there is enough money in the West to remove those crops. The banks handle the crops. They have no difficulty whatever in doing so. So that we get right back to the same proposition, that we are to help out a number of these eastern banks at the expense of the interior.

Do any of the interior banks get the customs receipts? Certainly not. They do not come into those banks at all. They simply fill the coffers of the banks at the ports of entry.

Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Newlands] seems to think that the remedy will be by increasing the bulk of the circulating medium. I would like to ask the Senator if he for one moment believes that if we should double the amount of the currency in the United States within the next six months in one year thereafter there would not be the same hunger for money to uphold the stocks of the city of New York? The same conditions would follow. The cheaper the money, the greater the speculation; and the greater the speculation, the greater the demand for an excessive amount of money to uphold the enormous speculations.

I think the remedy is fairly and honestly given by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson]. Let the money go where the demand is greatest. The demand is always the greater where interest is higher, and in those sections of the country where the banks are able and willing to pay the 2 per cent referred to in the pending amendment, they will receive the money in preference to those who do not need it badly enough, at least to pay this interest.

I ask the Senator why should the banks have the benefit of this great amount that would be collected from the customs—about $400,000,000 per year, less the amount, of course, that will be drawn out by the Secretary of the Treasury? Why should they have it without any remuneration whatever? They certainly will receive benefit from its use. I know the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] indicated, in answer to a question from the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson], that these funds would remain in the banks. He says, of course, the banks would feel like loaning more if they had more in the banks on which to make loans; but, Mr. President, they certainly would not feel like extending a loan one cent beyond the limit unless they knew they had a reserve to meet the demands and to answer to checks. I think no one will deny that all these Government depositories receive this money exactly the same as they receive any other deposits, and it adds so much to their assets in times of stress, whenever there is a demand upon them.

Mr. President, I agreed with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] that I would not take more than five minutes upon this subject. I have taken four and a half, and I am going to yield the floor, with the hope, however, that the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota will be adopted.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, with his permission, I desire to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question or two about some of the provisions of this bill. I recollect some years ago-I thought it was in the last Congress, but I am informed that it was in the Congress prior to that-there was a similar bill introduced by the Senator from Rhode Island, and that there was a provision in it relative to the deposit of money in banks which prescribed that there should be a certain distribution of Government deposits in different sections of the Now, I find that this bill, drawn on the same lines with the previous bill and relating to the same subject, does not contain any such provision, and I should like to know from the Senator from Rhode Island why that omission is made in

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the committee tried, as I have explained several times, to keep every possible contested question out of this bill; to confine our suggestions of change in existing law in this section to leaving out the words "except customs receipts." It has been the purpose of the Secretary of the Treasury-and it will always be the purpose of every Secretary of the Treasury—to distribute these funds equitably throughout the country. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] has called attention to the published list of the national depositories, with the amount deposited in each. When the report was made there were 997 different depositories located in every State and Territory in the United States. I have no doubt whatever that any Secretary of the Treasury, having in view the public interests and having in view the demands of the various sections, would do exactly what the present Secretary has done. We did not put such a provision in this bill because, in the first place, we did not think it was necessary, and if we should go into the question of adding to the present law all amendments that may be suggested, we never would reach a conclusion.

Mr. BACON. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I desire to make this further inquiry of him. Under the present law the receipts from customs duties are not deposited in banks. That is one class of receipts which are received by the Government largely in one locality. The revenues of the Government which are now deposited in banks are revenues which to a much greater extent are received throughout the country—receipts from internal revenue, receipts from postoffices, and so forth and so on. For that reason it is probably, under the present law, more convenient for the Secretary of the to distribute his deposits throughout the country, whereas, if the addition is made, as we propose in this bill, of the receipts from customs as a fund which shall also be depositable, if I may use such a word, in the various banks of the country, the fact that almost all of those receipts are collected in New York, comparatively speaking, it seems to me would render it less probable that there would be that equal distribution throughout the country that now obtains on the deposit of funds received from other sources.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Georgia was not listening. I imagine, to the statement made by me in answer to the suggestions made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] as

Mr. BACON. I was called out of the Chamber, as we all frequently are, and I did not hear it.

Mr. ALDRICH. At the present time all the revenues except customs may be deposited in the Government depositories by collectors of internal revenue or deputy collectors of internal revenue or by other officers who are charged with the duty under the law of collecting the revenue—

Mr. BACON. That is the statute. Mr. ALDRICH. In national depositories or in subtreasuries, dependent upon the convenience of the people who make the collections. If deposited in a depository, they are as soon as possible sent to the nearest subtreasury. The only difference between customs and other receipts is that the customs receipts, under the law as it now stands, go immediately into a subtreasury. All the customs receipts and internal-revenue receipts—in fact, all receipts of the Government—go into the Treasury of the United States, and are by the Secretary of the Treasury distributed. It makes no difference whether they are received in San Francisco or in New Orleans or in Louisville, they are distributed by the Secretary. In case money is to be deposited in national depositories at his will, it makes not the slightest difference whether the amount in the Treasury was collected in Atlanta or in New Orleans or in San Francisco. If he finds that he has a surplus to-day of $150,000,000 above what he thinks is necessary in the Treasury of the United States—it may be in the subtreasury in New Orleans; it may be in the subtreasury in San Francisco nominally, or it may be in the subtreasury in New York—he deposits that money as from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BACON. Of course.

Mr. ALDRICH. And it makes not the slightest difference where it was collected.

Mr. BACON. But the thought that was in my mind-and I may be in error about it—is that while, of course, nominally it goes into the Treasury, if the money is collected, for instance, in Atlanta, it is not absolutely necessary before it shall go into a national bank in Atlanta that it shall go to the subtreasury and be shipped back to Atlanta.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no shipment about it. It is a system of accounting.

Mr. BACON. I understand that. Mr. ALDRICH. It is a system of checks. There is no actual shipment once in a thousand times. Whenever the money is deposited the actual cash is not deposited, the deposit is made by a treasury draft, or in some other form of an order.

Mr. BACON. As a general rule, I presume that is true as to all matters of exchange largely.

Mr. ALDRICH. So that in the matter of accounting there is no trouble whatever of the nature suggested by the Senator from Georgia as to these collections.

Mr. BACON. Waiving that part of it, I want to ask the Senator what he understands to be the rule by which the Secretary of the Treasury is governed in making these distributions as to the proportions to different sections?

Mr. ALDRICH. As I understand, it is the intention of the Secretary—he has said so to me verbally and his report shows that it is so-to distribute this money equitably as between the different States and sections throughout the United States.

Mr. BACON. But it is a matter entirely within the control of the Secretary

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a matter entirely within the control of the Secretary, and I hardly see how we could adopt any hardand-fast rule which might not under certain circumstances be very prejudicial to the Treasury itself. I do not believe that we can adopt a rigid rule that, for instance, a certain proportion of the public money should necessarily be deposited in a certain locality, because there might be some public reason or some public interest requiring the deposit of a larger or a smaller sum. For example, there might be reasons for an exceptional deposit in the city of Atlanta or, as has happened recently, in the city of San Francisco, or in some other section of the country where some emergency requires that an exception should be made. The Secretary, for instance, deposited large sums in San Francisco for the benefit of the people of that stricken city, and I imagine there is not a man in either House of Congress who would say that this was not a proper exercise of discretionary power on the part of the Secretary of the

Mr. BACON. I can not understand then why, if in the former bill, in the Fifty-seventh Congress, it was important to make some general provision of this kind, it should be omitted from this bill. I recognize the fact of course that it can not be said that a tenth shall be deposited here and a fourth there, but there can be a general direction. I have sent for the bill for the purpose of getting-

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection whatever, if the Senator desires it, to the insertion of a provision that these funds shall be distributed equitably, as far as practicable, among the different sections.

Something of that kind, I think, should be Mr. BACON. placed in the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. We did not put it in because we wanted, I repeat, to keep out of this bill all controverted questions, to make it as simple as possible in order that we might awaken as little discussion as possible.

Mr. BACON. I think the fact that it is out is more apt to raise controversy than if it was in.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will prepare such an amendment I will accept it for the committee

Mr. BACON. I have sent for the bill. There is another question, which is a very much more serious one to me, about which I desire to ask the Senator from Rhode Island. There are some features of this bill of which I am very much in favor. There are others which to my present apprehension are very objectionable, and I wish to call the attention of the Senator to one which to me seems to be very objection-The Senator may be able to remove the objectionable complexion of it. I refer to the provision in the bill which enlarges the opportunity of the national banks to reduce the circulation. By the present law the national banks are limited to $3,000,000 a month as to the extent to which they can reduce the circulation.

This bill proposes that they be permitted to withdraw $9,000,000 a month. Under the provisions of this bill, if it should become a law, it is perfectly competent for the national banks to reduce the circulation in the course of one year $108,000,000, as suggested to me by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Patterson], plus the amount of money which they are compelled to have in the banks to keep as reserve, besides other moneys that they would have. It is withdrawn. They are obliged to have a certain amount of money on hand.

That does not affect this question at all. Mr. ALDRICH. The amount of possible withdrawal is not affected by the ques-

Mr. BACON. I will leave that out and limit it to the other, though it occurs to me that that is a material consideration. But passing that by, the Senator from North Dakota, I think it spoke of this as a bill intended to enlarge or make more elastic the currency, to give the opportunity for larger circulation to meet the demands of constantly increasing business. think the Senator from Rhode Island also has alluded to it in the same way. But this seems to me to be a provision which looks directly in the opposite direction, and with the large con-centration of power in the hands of the larger banks in the large money centers it seems to me to be a dangerous power.

There was certainly good reason why the limitation was put upon the national banks that they should not retire currency to a greater extent than $3,000,000 a month. If with the smaller business that limitation was deemed important, it seems to me that as the business of the country increases, as activities are greater, demands for money more urgent, it is of still greater importance that the amount of money which can be within a limited, comparatively short, period withdrawn from circulation should not be enlarged. I should like to hear why the Senator from Rhode Island thinks that it is to the interest of the country, or even how it may be safe for the country, whereas heretofore it has been considered that $36,000,-000 was the utmost which could be safely withdrawn in one year, that now $108,000,000 a year may be withdrawn from circulation.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Georgia, who is very constant in his attendance on the sessions of the Senate and examines public questions with as much enterprise and intelligence as any man here, was not present, I think, when I made the explanation.

Mr. BACON We are on conference committees, and are called out of the Chamber every once in a while, and I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand that. I went over the ground. and I think very fully, as to the reasons which led the committee to make this recommendation.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator has stated it and it is in the RECORD, I will not ask him to restate it.

Mr. ALDRICH, It is in the RECORD.

Mr. BACON. I will ask some one to tell me privately.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have stated the reasons. I suggest to the Senator that I will, on behalf of the committee, move this amend-

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall distribute the deposits herein provided for, as far as practicable, equitably between the different States and sections.

Mr. BACON. I think that is proper.

Mr. ALDRICH, When the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota shall have been disposed of, I will offer this amend-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr.

NELSON

Mr. CULBERSON. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota is a long one, and substantially contains three propositions. One is to permit the customs receipts to be deposited in banks contrary to the present law; second, to enlarge the securities upon which the Treasury may make deposits; and third, to provide for interest upon the deposits. will ask the Senator if it is not practicable for him to separate those propositions, so that we may be allowed to vote upon them separately?

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator will permit the Senate to have a test upon the general proposition. Of course, if the amendment is voted down, I assume that will be the end of it, and then we can

Mr. CULBERSON. Some of us probably would favor some features of the amendment, but would not care to vote for the entire amendment. If the Senator from Minnesota does not see proper to separate these three propositions, I move to amend the amendment by adding after the word "money," in line 3, page 1, the words "except receipts from customs."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas proposes an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, which will be stated.

The Secretary. After the word "money," in line 3, page 1, insert "except receipts from customs.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CULBERSON. I offer an amendment to the amendment. On page 2, in line 6, I move to strike out:

Or municipality of the Union, or such bonds as are accepted by the vings banks of the States of Massachusetts or New York, commer-

Mr. NELSON. The amendment is not exactly in that form ow. I suggest that the amendment as modified in that particular be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from Minnesota.

The SECRETARY. The amendment was modified by striking out lines 5, 6, 7, and down to and including the word "par," in line 8, on page 2, and inserting:

Of the bonds and stocks in which the savings banks of the States of Massachusetts and New York are authorized under the laws of these States to invest their funds.

Mr. CULBERSON. The words "municipality of the Union," etc., have been stricken out.

Mr. NELSON. They have been stricken out. It is limited to State bonds and to stocks and the bonds mentioned.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move to strike out the words just read by the Secretary. In other words, speaking for myself personally and only for myself, I am not clear that we ought to enlarge the type of securities upon which deposits can be made. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas proposes to amend the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, as will be indicated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. It is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out, at the end of line 5, the following:

Or the bonds and stocks in which the savings banks of the States of Massachusetts and New York are authorized under the laws of these States to invest their funds.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BACON. I dislike to allude again to the matter, but in conversing with several Senators around I find that I am not the only one who does not know the ground upon which it is claimed that it is desirable and safe to enlarge the amount of money which can be retired from $3,000,000 to $9,000,000 month. As we will have to vote on the question, I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will give us the explanation.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that before the vote is taken upon that section, it not now being under consideration, I will again make the explanation which I made in the Senate the other

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON

Mr. ALDRICH. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

So Mr. Nelson's amendment to the amendment was rejected. Mr. ALDRICH. In compliance with the suggestion which I made when I was on the floor before, I move to amend the section by adding at the end thereof what I send to the desk:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated. The Secretary. It is proposed to add at the end of section 3, line 20, page 6, the following:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall distribute the deposits herein provided for as far as practicable equitably among the different States and sections.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer an amendment to the amendment. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 6, line 16, after the word "Government," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary shall, on or before the 1st of January of each year, make a public statement of the securities required during the year for such deposits.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think there is no objection to the amend-

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. After the amendment already adopted at the end of section 3 it is proposed to insert:

All national banking associations, designated as depositories of public money as aforesaid and receiving such money on deposit, shall pay to the Government of the United States such interest upon the deposit as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, not less, however, in any case than at the rate of 2 per cent per annum upon the average daily balance of such deposit.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that that amendment has already been acted upon.

Mr. NELSON. No; it was a part of another amendment. This is a separate proposition. I ask for the year and nays.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the amendment is not in order at this stage. It would be in order, of course, in the Senate, but it is a part of an amendment which has already been voted

Mr. NELSON. It is a separate proposition. It was a part of another proposition, and only a small part of it. This is an independent proposition entirely, and it is in order.

Mr. BERRY. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island—
Mr. ALDRICH. I withdraw my objection. Let the vote be

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. NELSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask that the amendment may be again stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. The amendment clearly makes the transaction a loan to the banks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I again announce my general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Proctors]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I again announce a general pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. Perkins]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his named was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Carmack] and the transfer of that pair to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dolliver], and I will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Martin]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. Allee], and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 41, as follows:

So Mr. Nelson's amendment to the amendment was rejected. Mr. STONE. It may be that the majority voting against the amendment objected to the amount of interest. I propose to offer the same amendment with a lower rate of interest. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read. The Secretary. At the end of the amendment proposed to be inserted as section 3, and after the amendment already agreed to at that place, insert:

All national banking associations, designated as depositories of public money, as aforesaid, and receiving such money on deposit, shall pay to the Government of the United States such interest upon the deposit as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, not less, however, in any case than at the rate of 1½ per cent per annum upon the average daily balance of such deposit.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. FRYE. I submit the conference report on the river and harbor bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 24991) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRYE. There is no matter about reading the report now. Mr. CULLOM. I rose to inquire if the Senator expects immediate action upon the report.

Mr. FRYE. I see that for to-morrow morning notices have been given by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Hans-BROUGH] of a bill, but it is not to interfere with appropriation bills, and I see that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERson] has given notice that he desires at that time to address the Senate. In the interest of the public business, I think I shall be obliged to insist that the conference report shall receive consideration immediately after the routine morning business to-

Mr. PATTERSON. I should like very much to dispose of the matter I have in hand. I expect to occupy but an hour.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to give notice at this time that the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill is ready, and I shall want to have it considered at as early an hour to-morrow as is possible, if I do not get an opportunity this afternoon.

Mr. WARREN. I have in my hand the conference report on the Army appropriation bill, which it is very necessary to have considered to-night. I have held it hoping that there might be a vote on the pending financial measure.

Mr. FRYE. I do not like to be discourteous toward the Senator, but it seems to me that at this late hour in the session these conference reports must be considered. The river and harbor report is a very important one, and it is very im-portant that it shall receive consideration to-morrow morning.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have no doubt about that, and if there was any danger of occupying more than an hour I would not ask to interfere. I shall not occupy over that time.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will confine himself to an hour. That is what I will aim to do, I will say Mr. PATTERSON. to the Senator from Maine, and I will come so near to it that the Senator from Maine will not object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The conference report on the river and harbor bill will be printed in the RECORD and also printed as a document.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24991) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, 9, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 27, 30, 33, 37, 38, 40, 41, 43, 47, 50, 59, 71, 72, 73, 74, 87, 89, 90, 93, 94, 98, 99, 100, 104, 108, 111, 113, 114,

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 7, 8, 10, 19, 20, 21, 22, 26, 28, 29, 35, 36, 42, 45, 51, 57, 60, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 84, 86, 88, 92, 95, 96, 97, 101, 102, 105, 106, 107, 112, 117, 118, 120, 121, 123, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following:

"Improving Sasanoa River, Maine: Completing improvement in accordance with the report of the Board of Engineers, dated February seventh, nineteen hundred and seven, forty-four thousand dollars.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the language proposed strike out the words "surveys, preparation of plans, and preliminary work in connection with securing easements and releases" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "investigation and further examination;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following

"Improving Providence River and Harbor, Rhode Island, by dredging to a depth of twenty-five feet for a uniform width easterly from the main ship channel between Long Bed and Kettle Point, in accordance with the plan submitted in House Document Numbered One hundred and eight, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, ninety thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the language as proposed and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Improving Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels, New York: The Secretary of War may prosecute the improvement in said channels with a view to obtaining a depth of thirty-five feet and subsequently increasing said depth to the full forty feet with a width of twelve hundred feet in accordance with the project adopted in the river and harbor act of eighteen hundred and ninety-nine.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following:

Improving and constructing inland waterway from Pamlico

Sound to Beaufort Inlet, North Carolina, ten feet in depth, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document Numbered Eighty-four, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, two hundred thousand dollars: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary for the completion of said project not exceeding in the aggregate three hundred and fifty thousand dollars, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following:

"The Secretary of War may cause a reexamination to be made of the Cape Fear River above Wilmington, North Carolina, with a view to reporting what modifications, if any, should be made in the existing project, the expense of which shall be paid from the amount appropriated in section two."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "shall" insert the word "may;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words "ninety thousand," as proposed, insert "seventy-five thousand; " and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 32: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following:

Improving Club and Plantation creeks canal, Georgia, in accordance with House Document Numbered One hundred and fifty-nine, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, twenty thousand dollars.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the language proposed to be inserted, strike out the words "by obtaining a depth of twenty-four feet of water at mean low tide between the channel as it now is and the pierhead lines as established by the Government in front of said city and extending from the Florida East Coast Railway bridge to Hogans Creek;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following:

"Improving harbors on the coast of Mississippi: The Secretary of War may, in his discretion, construct a dredge for use in said harbors and the channels adjacent thereto, at a cost not exceeding two hundred thousand dollars, of which amount, in case said dredge is constructed, twenty-five thousand dollars shall be taken from the appropriation herein for Gulfport Harbor and fifty thousand dollars from the appropriation for Pasca-

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "including the extension of channel to Fifty-sixth street;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following:

"Improving channel to Port Bolivar, Texas, by obtaining a channel one hundred and fifty feet wide and twenty-five feet deep, with an increased width in front of the wharf, as set out in House Document Numbered Seven hundred and nineteen, Fiftyninth Congress, first session, fifty thousand dollars.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "of which amount seven thousand five hundred dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may, if directly and necessarily required in the interest of navigation, be used to prevent a cut-off in said river between Choctaw Railway bridge and the town of Devall Bluff, Arkansas;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following at the end of the preceding paragraph and not as a separate paragraph: "And the Secretary of War may appoint a Board of Engineers, whose duty it shall be to examine the present condition of the United States canal and the Tennessee River from the head of Elk River Shoals to the Florence Railway bridge, in the State of Alabama, with a view to permitting the improvement of the above-described stretch of said river by private or corporate agency in conjunction with the development of water power by means of not more than three locks and dams; and the said Board may examine any plans presented by such agency and shall report whether the same, if constructed, can, without injury to navigation, or with advantage thereto, be used to develop water power, and what portion, if any, of the expense of the work should be borne by the United States; and such Board shall report its findings not later than the first Monday in December, nineteen hundred and seven, and until such Board shall make its report and action shall be taken thereon by Congress no permits shall be issued under the provisions of the act approved March sixth, nineteen hundred and six, entitled 'An act to authorize the construction of dams and power stations on the Tennessee River, at Muscle Shoals, Alabama;'" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the language proposed to be stricken out, and in lieu of the language proposed to be inserted insert the following:

Improving Lock and Dam Numbered Nineteen in the Ohio River, in the States of Ohio and West Virginia, two hundred thousand dollars."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "Improving the great Miami embankment of Ohio River east of Lawrenceburg, Indiana; repairing damage caused by the recent flood of the Ohio River and tributaries, twenty thousand dollars, if such repair shall be directly and necessarily required in the interest of navigation;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

"And it is further provided, That the work of improvement shall proceed without delay by reason of conflicting or other claims of title or interests and without prejudice to any pending litigation in reference thereto.

"And all lands and waters north of the present St. Marys Falls ship canal throughout its length, and lying between said ship canal and the international boundary line, needed in connection with the execution of this project, or any project hereto-fore adopted by Congress, for improving St. Marys River at the falls, aside from any lands owned by the United States, all of which are hereby made available for said project, shall be ac-quired in the following manner and under the following condi-

"The Secretary of War may, in his discretion, enter into nego tiations with any persons or corporations claiming title to any portion of the land or waters required for the construction of the said canal, and may acquire title to such portions of such river or lands as may be required for its construction and operation, but any agreement made by him shall be without prejudice to any claim of title by the United States and without the grant of any rights or privileges in said river or lands therein which shall create a right to compensation in case any further portion of said river or said lands therein between the canal herein provided for and the international boundary line shall be hereafter required for purposes of navigation.

If such lands and waters can not be obtained in the manner and under the conditions above set forth the same shall be acquired as follows:

"The Secretary of War may cause proceedings in condemnation to be prosecuted under existing law, or a copy of the said plan numbered 3 on a large scale shall be prepared and exhibited in the office of the United States engineer at Sault Ste. Marie, and the Attorney-General shall proceed to ascertain the owners or claimants of the premises embraced therein, and shall cause to be published for the space of thirty days in one or more daily newspapers in the city of Sault Ste. Marie that the same has been taken for the uses mentioned in this act, and notifying all claimants to any portion of said premises to file, within its period of publication, in the Department of Justice a description of the tract or parcel claimed and a statement of its value as estimated by the claimant. On application of the Attorney-General the presiding judge of the circuit court of appeals of the United States for the sixth circuit shall appoint three persons not in the employ of the Government or related to or in any manner connected with the claimants to act as appraisers, whose duty it shall be, upon receiving from the Attorney-General a description of any tract or parcel, the ownership of which is claimed separately, to fairly and justly value the same and report such valuation to the Attorney-General, who thereupon shall, upon being satisfied as to the title of the same, cause to be offered to the owner or owners the amount fixed by the appraisers as the value thereof; and if the offer be accepted, then, upon the execution of a deed to the United States in form satisfactory to the Attorney-General, the Secretary of War shall pay the amount to such owner or owners from the appropriation made therefor in this act.

"In making the valuation the appraisers shall only consider the present value of the land or property acquired, without reference to its value for the uses for which it is taken under the provisions of this act.

"The appraisers shall each receive for their services five dollars for each day's actual service in making the said appraisements.

"Any person or corporation having any estate or interest in the premises who shall for any reason not have been tendered payment therefor as above provided, or who shall decline to accept the amount tendered therefor, may, at any time within one year from the publication of notice by the Attorney-General as above provided, file a petition in the Court of Claims of the United States setting forth his right or title and the amount claimed by him as damages for the property taken, and the court shall hear and adjudicate such claims in the same manner as other claims against the United States are now by law directed to be heard and adjudicated therein: Provided, That the court shall make such special rules in respect to such cases as shall secure their hearing and adjudication with the least possible delay.

"Judgments in favor of such claimants shall be paid as other judgments of said court are now directed to be paid; and any claimant to whom a tender shall have been made, as hereinbefore authorized, and who shall decline to accept the same, shall, unless he recover an amount greater than so tendered, be taxed with the entire cost of the proceeding. All claims on account of ownership of any interest in said premises shall, unless petition for the recovery thereof be filed within one year from the date of the first publication of notice by the Attorney-General as above directed, be forever barred: Provided, That owners or claimants laboring under any of the disabilities defined in the statute of limitation of the State of Michigan may file a petition at any time within one year from the removal of the disability. Upon the publication of the notice, as above directed, the Secretary of War may take possession of the premises embraced in said plan numbered 3, and proceed with the construction herein authorized; and upon payment being made therefor, or without payment, upon the expiration of the time as above limited, without filing the petition, absolute title to the premises shall vest in the United States, and no permits shall be granted by the Secretary of War or other official of the United States granting the right to occupy any portion of the land or waters of St. Marys River in the locality for said ship canal herein provided for, or between the same and the international boundary line except upon the express condition, accepted by the grantee therein, to the effect that the erection of structures or the utilization of water power shall create no rights against the United States in case the whole or any part of the said river or the lands therein is required for the purposes of navigation, and further, that such structures or rights so granted shall be surrendered to the United States without cost when so required for purposes of navigation aforesaid, and any and all rights under any permits or licenses heretofore granted shall be deemed to be revoked unless such permits or licenses are reissued upon the terms that further improvements and expenditures shall entitle the licensee to no greater consid-eration than such licenses are now entitled to, if any; but nothing herein contained shall be held to imply that any right now exists to compensation on account of expenditures made or al-"The Secretary of War may acquire lands for the location of remedial or compensating works to the extent required to enable the Michigan-Lake Superior Power Company to comply with the provisions of the river and harbor act of 1902, but such lands, if so acquired, shall be obtained without expense to the United States.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the language proposed to be inserted and restore the language proposed to be stricken out with an amendment as follows: After the word "bridge" strike out the word "five" and insert the word "seven;" and the Senate agree to the same. Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "four" insert the word "three;" and the Senate agree to the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the words "Fox River, Illinois," following said amendment, insert a colon instead of a period and insert these words as the beginning of the following paragraph instead of as a heading; and

"Sixth. And the said Board shall also report upon any water power which may be created in the portion herein directed to be surveyed, as well as in the proposed waterway from Saint Louis to Chicago heretofore surveyed, and the value thereof, and what means should be taken in order that the Government of the United States may conserve the same or receive adequate com-pensation therefor, and upon lands which may be drained by the construction of either of said proposed waterways, and shall also report what steps, if any, shall be taken to cause the cost of the improvement to be defrayed, in whole or part, by means of such water power or lands."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted insert the following: "and the Secretary of War may prosecute this work in accordance with the report submitted in House Document Numbered Three hundred and forty-one, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, for the purpose of ultimately securing and maintaining a depth of channel of six feet;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert the language as proposed, and after the word "navigation" the language as proposed, and after the word mangation where it occurs for the second time after this amendment, and before the words "Provided further," insert the following: "Provided further, That so much of the amount as is to be expended north of the forty-sixth parallel may be applied for improving the harbor at Bismarck, North Dakota, on the east side of the river below the Northern Pacific Railroad bridge:" side of the river below the Northern Pacific Railroad bridge;

and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 70: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the words "Provided further" insert the word "also," and at the end of the language proposed strike out the period and insert a comma and the words "and shall also report whether the same is directly and necessarily required in the interest of navigation;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 83: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "and the entrance thereto;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 85: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "and" insert the word "also;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendement numbered 91: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the language proposed strike out the period and insert a comma and the following words: "and Saint Marks River;" comma and the following words: and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following:

Boise de Sioux River, Lake Traverse, and Big Stone Lake, and the portages between the said lakes and said river, with a view to diverting the flood waters of the Red River of the North into the Minnesota River."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 109: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 109, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the language proposed to be inserted strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the language proposed to be inserted strike out the words "and overcoming the effect of sliding or encroaching shores;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 122: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 122, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following:

"Sec. 6. That the Secretary of War may approve a change of plans or of location of any bridge over the North or Hudson River at New York City which has heretofore been approved by the Secretary of War under any act of Congress, upon applica-tion to him by the parties authorized to erect such structure, their successors or assigns, provided that such changed location shall not be over any anchorage ground and shall be within the original authorization for such structure, and shall not be deemed by the Secretary of War to be detrimental to navigation or to the public interest after public hearings held thereon, and the structure whose changed plans or location is so approved shall be a lawful structure."

And the Senate agree to the same.

PROPOSED CURRENCY LEGISLATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18566) to amend sections 6 and 12 of the currency act approved March 14, 1900.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope a vote will be taken on the pending

amendment

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to modify the amendment proposed, making it 1 per cent instead of 1½ per cent, and where it reads "average daily balance" making it read "average weekly balance.'

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment will be read as modi-

The Secretary. It is proposed to insert at the end of section 3, immediately after the amendment already agreed to:

All national banking associations designated as depositories of public money, as aforesaid, and receiving such money on deposit, shall pay to the Government of the United States such interest upon the deposits as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, not less, however, in any case than at the rate of 1 per cent per annum upon the average weekly balance of such deposit.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment as amended.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I propose an amendment which I ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary. At the end of section 3 and after the amendment already agreed to at that place insert the following pro-

Provided also, That the amount of reserves permitted to be deposited by each association in reserve city banks or central reserve city banks shall be diminished each year by 10 per cent thereof until each association shall have in actual cash in its vaults at least four-fifths of the reserves required by law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada to the amendment as amended.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the third section as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. The fourth section has not yet been acted

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee proposing to insert an additional section will be read.

The Secretary. The Committee on Finance report to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 4. That section 9 of the act of July 12, 1882, as amended by the act of March 14, 1900, be further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That any national banking association now organized, or hereafter organized, desiring to withdraw its circulating notes, upon a deposit of lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States, as provided in section 4 of the act of June 20, 1874, or as provided in this act, is authorized to deposit lawful money and, with the consent of the Comptroller of the Currency and the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, withdraw a proportionate amount of the bonds held as security for its circulating notes in the order of such deposits: Provided, That not more than $9,000.000 of lawful money shall be deposited during any calendar month for this purpose: And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to bonds called for redemption by the Secretary of the Treasury, nor to withdrawal of circulating notes in consequence thereof."

Mr. BACON. Before we vote on the amendment I desire the Senator from Rhode Island to give the information as to the increase from $3,000,000 to $9,000,000 of the amount which can be monthly retired in the circulation of national banks.

Mr. ALDRICH. The banks oftentimes will not take out currency when there is really a need for it and when it would be reasonably profitable because they can not retire it to any considerable extent when it ceases to be profitable. The result has been that there has not been a normal increase in the amount of the circulating notes of national banks on account of this defect in the law.

Besides that, there is a Jarge and very strenuous demand throughout the country for what is called elasticity in the volume of our currency. The only elasticity by retirement that is now permitted is $3,000,000 a month in a total of $3,000,000,000 of money outstanding in the United States at the present time.

At the time this limit was fixed, in 1882, the total amount of paper money outstanding was $700,000,000; it is now $2,100,000,000, and there is practically the same proportion of possible contraction now as then. There were conditions in 1882 when this limit was fixed which do not exist now.

For all these reasons and others which I would be very glad to go into at much greater length, and which I did go into at greater length when the matter was before the Senate for consideration a few days ago, as the Senator from Georgia will find by an examination of the RECORD, the committee strongly of the opinion that this provision ought to stand as

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I repeat that there are some provisions of the bill that I am very much in favor of, and I think there are provisions in the bill which meet a great public The provisions to which I especially allude are those in the first part of the bill with reference to the denominations of money which shall be furnished to the country. doubtedly a very great need for that change in the law.

I am very anxious to vote for so much of the bill as makes provision for that purpose, but it does strike me that this is a most serious provision which authorizes the retirement of $9,000,000 per month. The Senator says that it is a small proportion to the entire amount of money in circulation, some $3,000,000,000, but it is quite a large proportion of the amount of national-bank bills that will be in circulation.

The reason given by the Senator that it would be necessary for the banks to have the opportunity to retire circulation in order that they may feel safe to increase the circulation would be a very good reason if this retirement were limited to the excess of such issue. If the provisions of the bill were such that it would limit the amount of this extraordinary retirement to occasions where they had issued an excess of money to meet some particular emergency, it would be possibly in-nocuous; there would be no danger in it; but it is not limited to that, and at a time of the greatest stringency and when they have not issued any excess of money, and at a time when there may be the greatest need that there should be an expansion of money rather than a contraction of it, it will be within the power of the banks under the provisions of the bill to retire this large amount of money.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BACON. I will; but I am not certain that I can answer

it. I do not claim to be a financial expert.

Mr. SPOONER. Nor do I; but the Senator's observations seem to imply that he is under the impression that this is left entirely to the will of the banks.

Mr. BACON. No; I recollect the language of the law. It is in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SPOONER. It can only be done with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BACON. That is true, and that is a safeguard to a certain extent, I will grant you; but the same safeguard was upon it when the amount was limited to $3,000,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Georgia, I know, does not want to make a statement that is not accurate.

Mr. BACON. Certainly not.

Mr. ALDRICH. That provision is not in the present law. It is new in this bill.

As to supervision?

Mr. ALDRICH. As to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and the consent of the Comptroller of the Currency

Mr. BACON. I have not the law before me. I was under the impression it was there. Of course I will submit to that as a correction. I certainly do not wish to make any misrepresentation. I was going entirely by memory. In fact I had tried to find the provision of law as it now stands and I had the book before me, but had failed to find it in the act of March 14, 1899. I think that is the amendment to the act of 1882. But I had not found it and I did not have the language before me. I was led into the error simply as a matter of memory.

But, leaving that aside, I do not think that that is a sufficient safeguard. I do not think it ought to be in the power of the moneyed institutions of the country to contract money to that extent, unless the Senator can frame this provision in such a manner as will limit the withdrawal of this extraordinary amount of money to cases where there has been an extraordinary issue.

The Senator speaks of it as being a very small proportion of the total amount of currency, $3,000,000,000, and yet, Mr. President, I see in the papers that there is a great stringency of money and a great depreciation in the stocks to-day because of the unusual demand upon the money market caused by two or three railroad companies, which in the aggregate, I think, are about to call for something like $100,000,000. That is an evidence, to my mind, that the subtraction of $100,000,000 from the currency of the country causes stringency and creates difficulty in all branches of trade and commerce.

I would be very glad to see that provision changed. I do not consider it safe to the business of the country. It never has been regarded as safe heretofore that more than $3,000,000 should be allowed to be withdrawn from the currency in any one month. I do not understand why there are any such changed conditions as will make it safe now to withdraw $9,000,000 a month. It seems to me that when the business enlarges, when there is a greater demand for money, the greater will be the danger when we put it in the power of any of these aggregated banks to contract the currency at such times, I might say, of emergency, certainly of demand for all the money which can be controlled.

Therefore, Mr. President, I will be very glad if the Senator would agree to medify the amount and put it back to the original. I very much prefer that he would modify it. If it would accomplish something, I might offer an amendment, but it posaccomplish something, I might offer an amendment, but it possibly might be defeated, and in that way accomplish nothing.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, following out the line of discussion opened by the Senator from Georgia, I suggest that instead of fixing an arbitrary sum of $9,000,000 per month, which can be retired under this act, we fix a certain percentage of the aggregate circulation. The aggregate circulation of the banks is now $600,000,000. I would suggest that the banks be permitted to retire 1 per cent per month, which would make $6,000,000. If the banks increase their circulation to $1,000,000,000 later on, then under the amendment that I propose they will be entitled to withdraw from circulation $10,000,000 per month. If, on the other hand, the circulation should diminish to the old circulation of $300,000,000, then the amount withdrawn would correspond with the amount now permitted by law, namely, 1 per cent of $300,000,000, or $3,000,000 per month.

The amendment which I offer is in line 10, page 7, to strike out the words "nine millions of dollars of lawful money and insert "1 per cent of the aggregate circulation of such national banking associations."

As I have stated, if the circulation is $300,000,000 it would mean the withdrawal of $3,000,000 per month; if the circulation is $600,000,000, it permits the withdrawal of $6,000,000 per month, or $72,000,000 per year. It seems to me that there ought to be some proportion between the withdrawal and the aggregate amount of circulation.

I offer the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada offers an amendment, which will be read.

The Secretary. Line 10, page 7, section 4 of the amendment of the committee, strike out the words "nine millions of dollars of lawful money" and insert "1 per cent of the aggregate circulation of such national banking associations."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I have not yet been able to complete the amendment which I was endeavoring to draft. I will state the substance of it and endeavor, if I have time, to formulate it. I suggest that there should be an amendment at least to the effect that not more than $3,000,000 shall be withdrawn in any calendar month, unless there has been an increase in the circulating notes of national banks within the preceding six months which shall be at least equal to the excess of $3,000,000; in other words, that they shall not, except where there has been an increase, have an opportunity for a withdrawal of exceeding $3,000,000. The sole purpose, as stated by the Senator from Rhode Island, is to encourage banks to issue additional notes, having, as they would have under this provision of the bill, the assurance that when the emergency in response to which they issued the notes was passed they could withdraw it. All I want is that they shall have the liberty thus to withdraw exceeding $3,000,000 only when they have within six months previous to that time increased the circulation.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that he will accomplish his purpose by voting against the adoption of this section.

Mr. BACON. No; I will not. Mr. ALDRICH. Well—

Mr. BACON. The Senator misjudges me altogether when he says that. The Senator misjudges me when he says I will accomplish my purpose by voting against it; and I am a little surprised at the Senator that he should even make any suggestion to that effect.

Mr. ALDRICH. I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. BACON. I am not taking any offense at it, but I am astonished that the Senator should say such a thing. Mr. President, it does me or any other Senator here a very great injustice to make any suggestion of that kind, and I hope that the service I have had in the Senate has not induced anybody to believe that I would make any suggestion of this kind simply for the purpose of having an opportunity of voting to make a

Mr. ALDRICH rose.

Mr. BACON. The Senator, Mr. President, if he will excuse me a moment, is engaged in the advocacy of a bill which is to affect every interest in this country, and I am in the utmost good faith trying to protect the country against the evil which he says he is endeavoring to correct, and that is the scarcity of money. That is what I am trying to do, and the Senator from Rhode Island, having control of the bill and having, as we know, the absolute power to defeat any amendment which may be offered, I am appealing to him personally that he will relieve the bill of one feature which I think is an exceedingly objectionable one, and I am endeavoring to relieve it, Mr. President, not by any effort to defeat what the Senator says is his object, but by endeavoring so to frame this proposed law that the object the Senator has may be accomplished, and at the same time the evil which I anticipate may not be put before us in case we are to pass this bill.

I repeat what I was about to say to see whether or not the suggestion of the Senator can possibly find any correct founda-The Senator says his object in advocating here the privilege to the banks to withdraw $9,000,000 per month, whereas the law now limits them to $3,000,000 per month, is to encourage the banks to increase their circulation when there is a demand for the increase of circulation upon the ground that with such opportunity to withdraw when the demand has passed they will be free to make the increase without the apprehension that they will have the money on hand when there will be no demand for it. I think I am correct in stating the position to the Senator.

Now, recognizing that, my proposition is simply this: That the banks shall have that right whenever they have met the increase, whenever, in case of emergency, they have within six calendar months prior to that time increased the total circulation of the national banks to an amount exceeding the $3,000,000, that they may withdraw an amount exceeding $3,000,000—of course if they have increased it at all it will be very much exceeding that—and the only effect of it will be to prohibit national banking act, and for other purposes.

their withdrawal where they had made theretofore no increase in the amount of circulating notes.

Mr. President, I shall offer my proposition as an amendment. If the Senator does not accept it, I can not help it, but I wish to assure him—and I do not know that it is necessary to assure him—that it is a fact that I am offering it in good faith and not for the purpose of making a record. I move to insert in line 12, section 4, page 7, after the word "purpose," these words:

And provided further, That not more than $3,000,000 of lawful money shall be deposited during any calendar month for this purpose unless within the six months next preceding said month there shall have been an increase in said circulating notes in an amount equal to said excess.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance as section 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass? Mr. MALLORY. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], but I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. ALLEE] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. He is not in the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am again obliged to inform the Senate that I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK]. I have transferred that pair to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dolliver], and am therefore at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Scort].

As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded. Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas.

I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. Mulkey]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. WARREN. I was simply going to ask, before yielding, that the statement accompanying the report may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The statement referred to is as follows:

Amount of bill as reported by conferees_ 78, 535, 282. 75 Mr. WARREN. I now yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this bill involves very large amounts I should like to have the assurance of the Senator in charge of it that the conference committee has not reported in any case inserting new matter in the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I can give the Senator that assurance and accompany it with the statement as regards figures—and he alludes to it as a large appropriation bill-that it carries about three and a quarter million dollars less in the conference report than when it passed the Senate.

Mr. HALE. That is a very good feature of the report. Is the Senator entirely certain that no new matter has been injected into this report?

Mr. WARREN. In conference?

Mr. HALE. In the conference report.
Mr. WARREN. I take great pleasure in assuring the Senator that even he will not find any fault with a single item in the bill as to any new matter that has been injected in the conference.

Mr. HALE. I am very well content with that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Now, Mr. President, I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives and ask for a further conference with the House thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. FORAKER, and Mr. BLACKBURN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DEPOSIT OF LAND-OFFICE MONEYS. Mr. HANSBROUGH submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11040) to authorize the receivers of public moneys for land districts to deposit with the Treasurer of the United States certain sums embraced in their accounts of unearned fees and unofficial moneys, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments with an amend-ment as follows: Strike out the whole of the Senate amendment and as a substitute therefor add at the end of section 4 of the bill the following: "Provided, That no homestead entryman shall be required to make payment of the purchase money on any application to make a cash entry until the same shall have been approved by the register and receiver, but such payment shall be made within ten days after notice of such approval;" and the House agree to the same.

H. C. HANSBROUGH, KNUTE NELSON, A. J. McLaurin, Managers on the part of the Senate. JOHN F. LACEY, A. J. GRONNA, JOHN L. BURNETT, Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

APPEALS IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

Mr. NELSON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15434) to regulate appeals in criminal prosecutions, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered —, and agree to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of the said amendment insert

the following

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a writ of error may be taken by and on behalf of the United States from the district or circuit courts direct to the Supreme Court of the United States in all criminal cases, in the following instances, to wit:

"From a decision or judgment quashing, setting aside, or sustaining a demurrer to any indictment, or any count thereof, where such decision or judgment is based upon the invalidity or construction of the statute upon which the indictment is founded.

"From a decision arresting a judgment of conviction for insufficiency of the indictment, where such decision is based upon the invalidity or construction of the statute upon which the indictment is founded.

From the decision or judgment sustaining a special plea in bar, when the defendant has not been put in jeopardy.

"The writ of error in all such cases shall be taken within thirty days after the decision or judgment has been rendered and shall be diligently prosecuted and shall have precedence over all other cases.

"Pending the prosecution and determination of the writ of error in the foregoing instances, the defendant shall be admitted to bail on his own recognizance: Provided, That no writ of error shall be taken by or allowed the United States in any case where there has been a verdict in favor of the defendant."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act providing for writs of error in certain instances in criminal cases.'

And the Senate agree to the same.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL. Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. ROSEBUD (SOUTH DAKOTA) INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. GAMBLE submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24987) to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus or unallotted lands in the Rosebud Indian Reservation. in the State of South Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect, having met in full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the Senate recede from its amendment No. 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 2 and agree to the same with an amendment, adding the following proviso: "Provided, That the same shall be reimbursed to the United States from the proceeds received from the sale of lands described herein or from any money in the Treasury belonging to said Rosebud Indians;" and the Senate agree to the same.

HOURS OF EMPLOYMENT OF RAILROAD EMPLOYEES.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill (S. 5133) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon, and that the Senate bill and the House amendment be printed in different type.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC EXPOSITION.

Mr. PILES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 7382) to encourage the holding of an Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition at the city of Seattle, State of Washington, in the year 1909.

Mr. HALE. Pending that, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. PILES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 27, 1907, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Tuesday, February 26, 1907.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That hereafter during this session a motion to consider in the House, as in Committee of the Whole House, bills on the Private Calendar of the classes hereinafter described shall have the same privilege as is given by the rules on Fridays to motions to go into Committee of the Whole House to consider bills on the Private Calendar:

All bills not objected to after five minutes' explanation thereof reported from committees other than the Committee on Pensions, Invalid Pensions, Claims, and War Claims, excepting bills proposing to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER Is there objection?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to see a copy of the order. I will object until I can inform myself about it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. While the gentleman is examining the order, I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question on my own hook. Does this rule shut out all bills from the Committee on Claims and the Committee on War

Mr. DALZELL. It only provides for bills on the Private Calendar that come from the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on Public Lands, and all committees except War Claims, Claims, the two pension committees, and bills that propose to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims.

Missouri. Why should not a man who has a bill reported from one of these committees—a valid bill, reported by the Committee on War Claims, for instance—have as much right to call that up as a man who has one of these other bills that is made in order?

Mr. DALZELL. Because this is Tuesday and we shall adjourn next Monday, and from now until the 4th of July would not dispose of bills on the Private Calendar if you included those that came from the Committee on War Claims and the Committee on Claims. Besides, the Committee on War Claims and the Committee on Claims have each had their day under

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Committee on War Claims has had no day except theoretically.

Mr. DALZELL. Theoretically it has. I have no interest in this, and I do not care whether the House adopts it or not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman says that the Committee on War Claims has had its day. I will tell you how it had its day. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], aided and abetted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], wasted that entire day, so that we never got to our claims. That is the plain, honest truth about the whole business, and I am sick and tired of it.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri that the time was well spent in defeating claims that never ought to pass.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is because the gentleman has no war claims coming from his State.

If the gentleman from Missouri occupies the time half as well as the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Illinois-

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object.
The SPEAKER. Objection is heard from two gentlemen.
Mr. WILLIAMS. I would not object if this was put in proper shape.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 24815—the agricultural appropriation bill—disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the agricultural appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. Wadsworth, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Lamb.

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 8510) to amend an act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents, with amendments, which I send to the Clerk's desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.. That section 2 of the act approved January 12, 1895, providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents, be amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 2. Paragraph 1. That the Joint Committee on Printing shall have power to adopt such measures as may be deemed necessary to remedy any neglect or delay in the execution of the public printing and binding.

"Par. 2. The Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives pray order the reprinting in a number not avoid the representatives.

"PAR. 2. The Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives may order the reprinting in a number not exceeding 1,000 copies of any pending bill or resolution, or any public law not exceeding 50 pages, or any report from any committee or Congressional commission on pending legislation not accompanied by testimony or exhibits or other appendices and not exceeding 50 pages, when the supply shall have been exhausted. The Public Printer shall require each requisition for reprinting to cite the specific authority of law for its execution.

"PAR. 3. No committee of Congress shall be empowed.

ply shall have been exhausted. The Public Printer shall require each requisition for reprinting to cite the specific authority of law for its execution.

"PAR. 3. No committee of Congress shall be empowered to procure the printing of more than 200 copies of any hearing or other document for its use except upon the approval of the Committee on Printing of either House of Congress, and then in a number not exceeding 500 copies.

"PAR. 4. All committee hearings or hearings of Congressional commissions, not accompanying reports, shall be printed as numbered documents, except when held in confidence by order of the committee or commission, in which case it shall be the duty of the chairman thereof to notify the Public Printer, in writing, of such action when the order to print is given.

"PAR. 5. Orders for printing extra copies, otherwise than herein provided for, shall be by simple, concurrent, or joint resolution. Either House may print extra copies to the amount of $500 by simple resolution; if the cost exceeds that sum, the printing shall be ordered by concurrent resolution, except when the resolution is self-appropriating, when it shall be by joint resolution. Such resolutions, when presented to either House, shall be referred immediately to the Committee on Printing, who, in making their report, shall give the probable cost of the proposed printing upon the estimate of the Public Printer; and no extra copies shall be printed before such committee has reported: Provided, That the printing of additional copies may be performed upon orders of the Joint Committee on Printing within a limit of $200 in cost in any one instance: And provided further, That nothing in this paragraph shall be held to contravene the provisions of public resolution No. 11, approved March 28, 1904.

"PAR. 6. The term 'extra copies' as used herein shall be construed to mean copies in addition to the usual number as defined in the act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents, approved January 12 printed by order of Congress which can not under the provisions of public resolution No. 13. Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, approved March 30, 1906, be properly charged to any other appropriation or allotment of appropriation already made, it shall, upon order of the Joint Committee on Frinting, be charged she allotment of appropriation. The property of the Senate and the House of Representatives, or the committees and officers thereof, shall be furnished by the Public Printer upon requisition of the Senate and the House of Representatives or the committees and officers thereof, shall be furnished by the Public Printer upon requisition of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, respectively. This shall not operate to prevent the purchase by the officers of the Senate and House of Representatives of such stationery and blank books as may be necessary for sale to Senators and Members in the stationery rooms of the two Houses.

"Par. 10. Each Senator and Representative shall be entitled to the binding in half moreco, or material not more expensive, of but one copy of each public document to which he may be entitled, an account of which, with each Senator and Representative, shall be kept by the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House, respectively."

SEC. 2. That section 81 of the act approved January 12, 1895, providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public printing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public shall be publications or dered printer by Congress, or either House thereof, shall be in four series, namely: One series of reports made by the committees of the House of Representatives, to be known as Senate Documents, and one series of documents other than reports of committees, the orders for printing which originate in the Senate, to be known as Senate Documents, and one series of documents other than committee reports, the orders for printing which originate in the House of Representatives, to be known a documents shall be under the direction of the Public Printer, as heretofore.

SEC. 4. That upon request of the superintendent of documents the Public Printer is hereby authorized and directed to either increase or diminish the number of copies of publications furnshed for distribution to designated depositories or State and Territorial libraries, so that the number of copies delivered shall be equal to the number of libraries on the list: Provided, That the number thus delivered shall at no time exceed the number authorized under existing statute: And provided further, That the allotment of 501 copies furnished for distribution to libraries be increased or reduced, from time to time, as the redistricting of States or the rearrangement of depository lists under provisions of law shall demand, to such numbers as may be necessary to comply with the law: And provided further, That all land-grant colleges shall be constituted as depositories for public documents, subject to the provisions and limitations of the depository laws.

SEC. 5. That in the printing of any document or report, or any publication authorized by law to be printed, or hereafter authorized to be printed, for distribution by Congress, the whole number of copies of which shall not have been ordered within two years from the date of the original order, the authority to print shall lapse, except as orders for subsequent editions may be approved by the Joint Committee on Printing, and then in no instance shall the whole number exceed the number originally authorized by law.

SEC. 6. That section 59 of the act approved January 12, 1895, providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents, and sections 81 and 99 of said act, and the amendment thereto in the act approved March 2, 1895, Statues at Large, volume 28, page 961, chapter 189, and all other laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The Clerk read the amendments recommended by the committee, as follows:

On page 2, in line 10, strike out the words "two hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one thousand."

In the same paragraph, in line 11, after the word "document." insert a comma and the words "which shall be germane thereto" and

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, the bill and amendments as submitted and read speak for themselves. If they do not speak for themselves they are easily explained, and I would say to the Members of the House at the outset, not intending to consume much time in explaining this bill, that it carries no provisions whatever that takes from a single Member or Senator any right or privilege that he now enjoys. It simply disposes of certain inconsistencies in the law as it now exists, clears up some incongruities, and confers authority for neces sary printing, which is now done without regard to law.

will say that the legislation carried in this bill is the result of the work of the Printing Investigation Commission, which was authorized two years ago-a Commission which came into existence by reason of a general demand on the part of the Departments of the Government, the Congress, and the country generally for reform in public printing, it being universally recognized that many things were printed for which there was no demand, and that more copies of things for which there was a demand were printed than it was necessary to print, resulting in a wastefulness and extravagance and improvidence recognized not only by the Departments and the Members of the House and Senate, but by the country at large. The basement of the Capitol became congested, the Departments filled, warehouses packed, until we found ourselves facing an accumulation the distribution of which is now one of the problems that confronts the Joint Committee on Printing. The result of the work of the Commission as organized two years ago was the passage of two joint resolutions known as "public resolutions 13 and 14." By the first resolution we placed the responsibility for the origin of copy with the various Departments, as separate from the Congress, giving them their allotment and giving Congress its allotment, holding the Departments and independent offices and bureaus of the Government responsible for what they originate and Congress responsible for what it originates. The public resolution No. 14 provided for the printing of whatever was ordered at the discretion of the Joint Committee on Printing, after conference with the officers of the House and Senate, in two or more editions. These two resolutions worked admirably from the start, and have resulted in the predicted For instance, during the last year there have been economy. printed for Congressional distribution alone 1,000,000 volumes less than were printed the year before, and in all a net saving of more than $1,000,000.

To such an ideal degree has public resolution No. 14 worked that it has stopped the accumulation of surplus publications, and the Members of this House find themselves no longer pursued by documents which they do not desire. The accumulation has stopped. That which has already accumulated, however, remains, and its distribution is one of the problems that the committee will hereafter solve. During the work of the Commission, as it was originally authorized, we were embarrassed with the incongruities and complexities and the woeful weakness of the printing law. That law was passed in 1895. that time more than 200 amendments have been added to the These amendments have originated almost without exception in the various committees of this House other than the Committee on Printing, and the result, as I have stated, has been incongruity and inconsistency and complexity, which have tried the patience of the Committee on Printing and the Public Printer, and which has resulted in the officers of Congress and the Departments ordering printing to an extravagant extent at times, to a necessary extent at other times, in utter and absolute violation of the law. We have taken up that proposition in the bill that has been presented. In so far as we could do it at this time we have corrected these irregularities. We have straightened out these inconsistencies; we have conferred authority where we believe it should be placed within justifiable limits, and have to a certain degree brought order out of chaos, and I believe that if this bill with amendments is passed it will follow the two public resolutions passed a year ago and perform the same work that they perform along the line of desired administration, as well as along the line of economy. I believe that the enactment of this bill with its amendments will result in a further saving in the neighborhood of a quarter of a million

The Commission in its work has had the cooperation, almost without exception, of the officers charged with the preparation and distribution of public documents and reports. It has had the most cordial support of the Public Printer, who is giving to the Government Printing Office what is probably the most effi-cient administration it has ever had. Order is being evolved out of chaos not only in a reorganization of the printing laws, but in the administration of this great Government establishment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment? Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Certainly. Mr. WILLIAMS. I am given to understand that this resolution provides that in some cases the number of copies of hearings before committees shall be so limited that there will not be even so much as one copy for each Member of the House.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will say to the gentleman that that is an error. The law at the present time limits the cost of hearings that can be printed to $500, with no limitation The committee has taken off the limit as to cost as to number. and fixed a limit as to number.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the number now?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. A thousand, by this amendment. Mr. WILLIAMS. One further question I would like to ask the gentleman. This is, I understand, a unanimous report of the joint committee?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. This is a unanimous report from the Committee on Printing of the House. I will say that there is not a step of this reform that has been taken that has not been taken in conference practically with every officer of this House who has anything to do with the ordering of printing or the distribution of documents.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask the gentleman—I notice in limiting the number of hearings to be printed to 1,000 it adds "for its use except by simple, concurrent, or joint resolution, hereinafter provided "—what is the meaning of the word "simple?"

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. It is simply a House resolution.

Mr. PAYNE. A resolution of one legislative branch.
Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. This is existing law, I would say to the gentleman from New York, and I would say this, further, to the gentleman from New York, that this law is absolutely essential to the printing-

Mr. PAYNE. I am entirely in accord with it. I only wanted to know in regard to the words "simple resolution." I understand that the House could order extra copies if it desired to do

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. The House can now order extra copies up to the limit of $500.

Mr. PAYNE. I notice page 4, paragraph 10, very properly limits the amount of binding that can be ordered by each Representative or Member of Congress. Now, I have understood there is a custom which has grown up in the Departments of binding in very expensive form, sometimes for distribution, copies of the reports and other documents. Has the gentleman in his bill anything regulating that, or is there anything in the law as it now exists to regulate that?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will say in reply to the in-quiry of the gentleman from New York that in the enactment of this paragraph we have simply reenacted the existing law, and in answer to the inquiry in regard to the authority of the various Departments to bind in expensive material, that is a matter that the committee finds, upon investigation, that this printing in extravagant bindings is a matter that can be controlled by the Joint Committee on Printing. It is now done by these Departments and independent offices and bureaus without authority of law, at least it is within the control of the Joint Committee on Printing, with the exception of that which is done for the libraries of the Departments and by the Librarian of Congress for their official use. But in so far as this extravagant-printing abuse goes, I will say to the gentleman from New York that the Committee on Printing has almost the trial control that will convert that a bases. ready issued an order that will correct that abuse.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman I am entirely satisfied to leave it to the distinguished gentleman's committee as now organized, and I do not know, I would not say as it shall be in the future organized; but I was anxious to know whether some discretion of that kind was in the committee and any step had been taken to prevent this abuse, and I want to say that so far as the bill is concerned I am heartily in accord with the bill itself and the general idea of the bill, and I want to congratulate the gentleman's committee on their successful efforts in offering this bill to the House.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I want to thank the gentleman from New York for the compliment which he has made the committee, and I now reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GARRETT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether there is any prospect of reprint of the book known as "Diseases of the Horse."

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has already prepared a favorable report authorizing the printing of 250,000 copies of the horse book and will pre-Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Clark].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell]. I do not want to talk about this matter, but I want to talk for a minute or two about the other matter for which unanimous consent was asked. If anybody has any objection let them offer it now. The situation about the claims business is exceedingly aggravated-

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request now for the passage of the resolution.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, I am going to withdraw my objection to it.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, I withdraw my request. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to make an explanation of

The situation about claims

The SPEAKER. One moment, please. If the gentleman will withdraw his objection, if the Chair may be permitted to say so, as this other matter is before the House, a little talk between the gentlemen will cause them to come to an agreement. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] says that he withdraws his request.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will not withdraw my objection unless I may have a chance to say what I want to say.

Mr. DALZELL. I will withdraw my request whether the gentleman withdraws his objection or not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes. Now, if anybody wants to object—

The SPEAKER. Does not the gentleman think, as this is a motion to suspend the rules—

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to object, but I think I will have to.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will get the five minutes before I get through here. Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill H. R. 25736 will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

Mr. Speaker-

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. WILLIAMS. I rise for the purpose of renewing the request made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] and subsequently withdrawn by him.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair may be permitted to suggest to the gentleman, an opportunity will be given a little later on. The Chair is of the opinion that in the dispatch of business at this time the Chair had better not recognize the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, of course I know my parliamentary right under the circumstances.

The SPEAKER. The parliamentary right is, first, recogni-

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Chair has recognized me; but I also recognize the justice of the reasoning of the Speaker, and I shall not press the request this moment.

FORTIFICATIONS BILL.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up conference report on the bill H. R. 23821—the fortifications bill and ask consent to read the statement in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 23821) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as fol-

The statement was read as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 23821) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report on each of said amendments:

On amendment numbered 1: Appropriates $900,000, instead of $700,000, as proposed by the House, and $1,200,000, as proposed by the Senate, for construction of fire-control stations and accessories.

On amendment numbered 2: Appropriates $200,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $300,000, as proposed by the Senate, for protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications.

On amendment numbered 3: Appropriates $100,000, instead of $112,800, as proposed by the Senate, for wall for the protection of Fort Moultrie, S. C., and limits the total cost of said wall to not exceeding $225,600.

On amendment numbered 4: Appropriates $400,000, instead of $453,550, for sea walls for the protection of fortifications at Forts Pickens and McRee, Pensacola Harbor, Florida, and limits the total cost of said walls to not exceeding $907,100.

On amendment numbered 5: Appropriates $50,000, instead of $54,678, for repairing and restoring batteries at Pensacola and for retaining walls to protect the same, and limits the total cost of said work to not exceeding $109,355.

On amendment numbered 6: Appropriates $500,000, instead of $544,750, as proposed by the Senate, for the repair and preservation of batteries at Mobile and for rebuilding sea walls and groins for the protection of the sites of the fortifications and garrison posts, and limits the total cost of said work to $1,089,500.

On amendment numbered 7: Appropriates $100,000, instead of $139,800, as proposed by the Senate, for rebuilding and strengthening the levees for protection at Fort St. Philip, La.
On amendment numbered 8: Appropriates $30,878, as proposed by the Senate, for replacing and overhauling ammunition, instruments, and other articles destroyed or damaged by storm at Forts Pickens and McRee, Fla.; Morgan and Gaines, Ala., and St. Philip, La.

On amendment numbered 9: Appropriates $5,250, as proposed by the Senate, for converting muzzle-loading field guns to breechloading guns for saluting purposes and for mounts for the same.

On amendment numbered 10: Inserts the provision proposed by the Senate, repealing section 2 of the act approved May 19, 1882, relative to the issue of heavy guns and mortars to States bordering on the sea or Gulf coast.

On amendment numbered 11: Strikes out the appropriation of $600,000, proposed by the House, for construction of seacoast batteries in the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands.

On amendments numbered 12 and 13: Appropriates, respectively, for construction of seacoast batteries for Hawaiian Islands $200,000, and for construction of seacoast batteries in the Philippine Islands $500,000.

WALTER I. SMITH, J. WARREN KEIFER, JOHN J. FITZGERALD, Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken; and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

STEAM VESSEL FOR REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up conference report on the bill (S. 925) authorizing the construction of a steam vessel for the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, and ask that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. Cushman] calls up a conference report and asks that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

The conference report and statement are as follows:

The committee of conference of the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the bill S. 925, "An act authorizing the construction of a steam vessel for the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment to the amendment of the House.

JAMES R. MANN, FRANCIS W. CUSHMAN, W. H. RYAN, Managers on the part of the House. S. B. ELKINS, GEO. C. PERKINS, S. R. MALLORY, Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement was read as follows:

STATEMENT.

The original bill as it passed the Senate authorized the construction of one revenue cutter for use in the Puget Sound

This bill was amended in the House by striking out all of said bill after the enacting clause and inserting provisions authorizing the construction of four (4) vessels for the Revenue-Cutter Service at a total cost not to exceed $650,000, and amending the title of said bill to conform with said amendment.

The Senate agreed to the amendment of the House with an amendment which in substance authorized the construction of one additional boat, to wit: One motor boarding boat for the port of Galveston, Tex.

The Senate now recedes from this Senate amendment. The effect of this is to eliminate from the bill the provision for the one motor boarding boat for the port of Galveston, Tex., and leaves the bill providing for the four revenue-cutter vessels. This leaves the bill in exactly the same form as it passed the House.

JAMES R. MANN, FRANCIS W. CUSHMAN, W. H. RYAN Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the conference report be agreed to.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 24640) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, with Senate amendments, be taken from the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. And I ask for a conference. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARD-NER] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the pension appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. GARDNER of Michigan, Mr. Brownlow, and Mr. Sullivan.

SUBSIDY BILL.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 529) to promote the national defense, to create a naval reserve, to establish American ocean mail lines to foreign markets, and to promote commerce.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the five hours allotted may be equally divided between the friends and opponents of the measure, and that two hours and a half be controlled by myself and two hours and a half by, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, there was so much confusion

I did not hear.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Grosvenor] asks unanimous consent that the five hours for general debate may be equally divided, and that one-half of it may be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from New. York [Mr. GOULDEN].

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Mississippi Spight] is the senior member of the committee. I wis request to be modified in this way: One half to be controlled by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Grosvenor] and the other half by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Spight], and, in his absence, by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that, The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from New Hampshire

[Mr. Currier] will take the chair.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CURRIER in the

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 529, the merchant-marine bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (8, 529) to promote the national defense, to create a naval reserve, to establish American ocean mail lines to foreign markets, and to promote commerce.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the discussion of the bill under consideration will doubtless lead to a most interesting discussion of some of the great questions of the day as connected with our foreign trade and questions of the development of it in the future.

I propose to occupy five minutes, or thereabouts, of time in answering one or two propositions that have been made in regard to this general subject, and I do it for the purpose solely of getting before the country and the committee the real facts involved in this question.

On yesterday my distinguished colleague from Nebraska [Mr. HINSHAW] used the following language:

This, in my judgment, will not do anything of the kind at all. If anything it will tend to decrease the shipping facilities that this country now possesses. Tell me what good it will do to the other vessels which this country seeks to run between this and other countries to have a few ships receive a large subsidy from this Government. Tell me what is the result of the subsidy, complimented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], between this country and Europe. How much did it increase our merchant marine between this and other countries? Tell me what merchant vessels now ply between our ports and foreign ports in consequence of the subsidy of this line between here and Liverpool.

And then he answers the question by saying:

Not a single vessel has been given to our merchant marine by that subsidy. The vessels that get a bonus from this country themselves carry merchandise to no great extent, and, as the distinguished gentleman now in my eye [Mr. LITTAUER] said to me, etc.

Mr. Chairman, adjournment over night gave me an opportunity to be ready to answer the gentleman's questions in a little different form from his own answers, and I have put it in writing, so that I may be accurate and in detail. In the first place, this mail subvention made it possible to operate under the American flag the two former Inman liners, the City of New York and the City of Paris, now the New York and Philadelphia, which were denied mail subsidies by the British Government on the ground of their American ownership, and were admitted to American registry by a special act of Congress. the same time the company owning these steamers contracted to build in the United States two even larger and swifter steam-ships, the St. Paul and St. Louis. These four steamers have given the United States for several years the only regular weekly 20-knot mail service throughout the year across the North Atlantic.

These ships are owned by the International Mercantile Marine Company. This company has also built and now owns two other still larger American steamers, the Finland and Kroonland, launched at Philadelphia in 1902, and the Maine, Missouri, Massachusetts, and Samland, since completed; a total of ten American steamers added to our registry by one company since the enactment of the ocean mail law of 1891. questionably one factor in inducing the company to build these other ships was the anticipated passage of the Frye shipping

These ten American ships are as follows:

	When built.	Tons.	Speed in knots.
St. Louis St. Paul New York Philadelphia Finland Kroonland Maine Missouri	1895 1895 1888 1889 1902 1903 1903	11, 629 11, 629 10, 798 10, 786 12, 760 12, 760 7, 904 7, 914	20 20 20 20 16 16 12 12
Massachusetts	1902 1903	7,913 7,913	12

The four 20-knot steamers, like other fast mail ships on the North Atlantic routes, have relatively small cargo capacity, but do export large values not only of manufactured goods, but of agricultural products, like butter, cheese, meats, and provisions. And in support of this I ask gentlemen who wish to controvert this to apply for the manifests of the outgoing ships which I have named.

The Kroonland and Finland are immense carriers of grain and other agricultural products to the continent of Europe, and so are the other four steamers in this list, three of which are cattle and cargo vessels pure and simple, with no accommodations for passengers.

So much for that statement. Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. GROSVENOR. I can not yield to the gentleman at this time. Similar statements have gone all through the country, and in my mail during the last twenty days more than 100 newspaper clippings have been sent to me withdrawing their statements of these facts and going upon the other side of the Now, one more proposition, gentlemen. In the State of Massachusetts there is an old time-honored newspaper advocating free trade. It is called the Springfield Republican. It is honored at least in its length of days and in the ability with which it has always advocated every interest of foreign countries against our country. In a recent publication that paper stated that we had by our tariff laws, following the idea of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] on yesterday, driven our import trade from South America; and now, having driven it away by our tax upon it, that we were seeking to climb over the tariff wall by ship subsidy, at the facts of that case, and here they are I proceeded to get

Four of the ocean mail lines proposed in the shipping bill favorably reported by the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries run to South America, two to Japan, China, and the Philippines, and one to Australasia.

It is objected by foes of the proposed legislation that the "Chinese-wall tariff" makes such steamship lines impracticable, because they can get no return cargo as of imported merchandise. Now, I give you the figures of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, of our total imports from South America. They are from Brazil, Argentina, Colombia, Peru, and Chile; and, furthermore, from Japan, China, the Philippine Islands, and Australasia. Free imports from all the South American countries that I have named were $127,788,000, while $23,006,000 were dutiable. In other words, 84.74 per cent, or, in round numbers, say, 85 per cent, of all the imports coming from all South American countries came in free of duty under the free list of the Dingley law.

Here are the figures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, of our total imports from South America:

	Per cent free.	Free.	Dutiable.
	81.74	$127, 788, 000	$23,006,000
Imports from Brazil Imports from Argentina Imports from Colombia Imports from Peru Imports from Peru Imports from Chile	98, 12 21, 77 85, 30 54, 22 96, 61	97, 966, 000 3, 342, 000 5, 469, 000 1, 709, 000 10, 695, 000	1,876,000 a 12,012,000 942,000 1,443,000 376,000

a Chiefly hides and wool.

Here are the figures of our imports from Japan, China, the Philippines, and Australasia:

	Per cent free.	Free.	Dutiable.
Imports from Japan Imports from China Imports from Philippines Imports from Australasia	72. 40	$37, 512, 000	$14, 308, 000
	66	18, 403, 000	9, 480, 000
	87. 67	11, 096, 000	1, 561, 000
	39. 28	7, 221, 000	a 11, 892, 000

a Largely wool.

(From Bureau of Statistics Report on Foreign Commerce and Navigation, 1905.)

And yet a great newspaper, hammering away in the interest of free trade, assailing Republican protection in almost every diurnal issue, falls into the blunder of saying that we have driven away South American trade by the tariff, when 85 per cent of it comes in absolutely free of duty.

Mr. SULLIVAN. If the tariff duty on articles coming from South America had been higher than that, I assume that 100 per cent of the imports would come in free of duty. words, that nothing would come in except those things that were on the free list.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from Massachusetts is exceedingly acute this morning. I am not arguing that there would not be more trade from South America, of a certain kind, if there was no duty on it. As soon as you refer to any duty on a South American product a Massachusetts man always squirms about the duty on hides.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Practically the whole, or more than half of this $23,000,000, was hides and wool. The western farmer is eulogized in this place occasionally, but the paper from which I am quoting never speaks of anything that does not immediately and directly benefit some special phase of the magnificent productions of Massachusetts.

Permit me to state in brief what this bill aims and proposes

This bill proposes an expenditure of public money for public purposes. Its justification is found in seven such purposes, any one of which would warrant the expenditure proposed or any other expenditure adequate to produce the results desired; an appropriation inadequate to produce results would be waste paper.

These purposes are: First. The establishment of a superior ocean mail service to those parts of the world where it is conceded that our present service is inferior both as to speed and regularity, and where political and commercial considerations suggest that it should be the best

Second. The maintenance of shipyards with skilled workmen able to build war vessels-as much a necessary part of the national defense as the Navy itself.

Third. The establishment of a fleet of fast steel merchant steamers suitable for auxiliary purposes in war, precisely similar to such fleets aided in precisely the same manner by the Governments of England, France, Germany, Russia, Italy, Spain, Austria-Hungary, and Japan.

Fourth. The establishment of a naval reserve force similar in its relations to the Navy to the National Guard of the States in its relations to the Army. There can not, of course, be such a body of men without ships on which they may become sailors, and there can not be ships unless we have the shipyards, for it is the policy of the great maritime powers of Europe to build their war vessels and their auxiliary fleets at home.

Fifth. We have inherited and shall never abandon the Monroe doctrine. That doctrine binds us not only to prevent the establishment of any European power upon the American continents, except in so far as they are already established, but also it impels us in the furtherance of its purposes to cultivate particular relations of political and commercial intimacy with the Republics of Central and South America.

Sixth. Within a very few years we have acquired in the Pacific Ocean the Hawaiian Archipelago, the Philippine Archipelago, a portion of the Samoan group, and the island of Guam, which impose upon us new and unavoidable duties to be met in part by increase of our power on the sea, naval and commercial. We have also undertaken to construct at heavy cost the Panama Canal, and for that purpose have assumed control over a narrow strip of land from the Atlantic to the Pacific; a control which carries with it obligations in some respects similar to those following our expansion in the Pacific.

Finally. The growth of our industries, which is beginning to outstrip the home market, imposes upon us commercial duties besides the deepening of our harbors and the lighting of our coasts. If we wish new foreign markets we must enable their buyers and sellers to come conveniently, regularly, and expeditiously to us and ours to go to them.

The fulfillment of any one of these purposes would doubtless be a sufficient justification for the measure. The seven collectively furnish unanswerable reasons in its support, especially in view of the fact that the propositions of the bill are not untried or unsuccessful experiments in our own history or in the history and present methods of the great maritime powers with which we are worthy to be classed. For establishing the national ocean mail service proposed we now have reasons similar in most respects to those which have led England to grant liberal ocean mail contracts almost from the beginning of commercial steam navigation up to to-day, and we have, as stated, special reasons of our own besides. We may apply to our present situation the conclusions of one of the most careful students of economics, President Arthur T. Hadley, of Yale College:

Of England's mail-contract system it may be fairly said: (1) That its aims are political and not commercial. It is a necessity for England to have constant communication with her colonies, and she has spent large sums for this object. It is almost equally important for her to have an efficient naval reserve and transport service, and she has made her mail contracts one among several means toward this end. (2) That the incidental commercial advantage to the subsidized companies has not been generally great except at a very early period of the system. This is evinced by the fact that rival unsubsidized lines have been equally successful, and that the largest contracts have been on terms which made them a matter of indifference to the party receiving them.

The incidental commercial benefits to steamship companies which may be organized under this bill will not be great. The sums provided are believed to be adequate to accomplish the purposes proposed, but they do not offer more than sufficient pay for public results attained.

ILLUSTRATIVE FACTS.

The volume of the ocean mails of the United States and the United Kingdom are about the same. (England's mails for the rest of Europe go by Channel ferries and thence by rail, and are not ocean mails.) Last year the United States sent over the ocean 1,800,000 pounds of letters, the United Kingdom 1,700,000 pounds; the United States 12,000,000 pounds of periodicals, books, etc., the United Kingdom 16,700,000 pounds. The United States paid $2,965,000 for its inferior service and showed a profit of $3,000,000; the United Kingdom paid $3,250,000, to which the Cape Colony and Canada alone added about $1,000,000, and her superior service was not even self-supporting.

Our ocean mail contracts under the act of 1891 are not sources of big profits to steamship companies, e. g., (a) American Line to Southampton under contract last year was paid $762,638. On the weight of the mails carried at our statutory rates per pound it would have been entitled to $010,542, so the Government saved nearly $150,000. (Report Superintendent Foreign Mails, p. 22.) These steamers, Harvard, Yale, etc., were needed in the Spanish war. (b) The New York and Cuba Mail has received $3,000,000 in ten years under its total contracts, and spent $9,000,000 in building steamships in the United States.

I now proceed to an analysis of the minority report of the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The report submitted by the minority of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries attacks in both principle and detail the proposed bill for ocean mail lines and for American shipping. This report declares, for instance:

While professing to provide better mail facilities, and relying on that for its justification, the bill will actually accomplish no such result so far as oriental service is concerned, unless the Post-Office Department continues to pay for mail service on other routes than the subsidized ones.

It is not to be supposed, of course, that the new service will supersede all others, but it is true that this bill will do exactly what it professes, and "provide better mail facilities." The Boston Steamship Company, from Puget Sound, is the only commercial line now running regularly on every voyage to the Philippines. It has a contract for carrying War Department supplies to our military stations, but three of the ships operated by this company are about to be withdrawn, and each of its two large 14-knot steamers makes a round voyage in about three months to the Philippines. The Pacific Mail Company, running regularly to Yokohama and Hongkong, send ships only infrequently to Manila, and about once in twenty days the old, slow, foreign-built Government transports, capable of about 10 knots, sail from San Francisco for the Philippines.

This bill would require a weekly mail service between Manila and the United States by 16-knot steamers. At least thirteen of these high-class ships would be required instead of the half a dozen now running on the San Francisco and Puget Sound lines. The doubling of the American mail fleet on the Pacific and the increase in the frequency of its sailings not only to China and Japan, but clear through to Manila would inevitably "provide better mail facilities" to the Orient.

THE EARLY MAIL SUBVENTIONS.

Going back into history, this report of the minority takes up the early mail subsidies to the Collins and other American steamship lines, and quotes President Pierce as declaring that this policy was a failure. Mr. Pierce accepted the extreme view held by a section of his party that these mail subventions, paid chiefly to steamers running out of northern ports and owned by northern people, benefited only northern industry. This ocean mail policy was involved in the unfortunate slavery quarrel between the North and the South, and Mr. Pierce, though a New Englander, took the view which, in that deplorable controversy, caused him to be called "a northern man with southern principles." But President Pierce, in his opinion of this ocean-mail policy, did not agree with other Democratic leaders like Chairman Thomas Butler King, of Georgia, of the Committee on Naval Affairs, or Senator Thomas J. Rusk, of Texas, or Senator James A. Bayard, of Delaware, who declared:

I am willing to trust American skill and industry in competition with any people on the globe when they stand nation to nation without government interference. But if the treasury of a foreign nation is poured into the lap of individuals for the purpose of destroying the interests of my country or for building up a commercial marine at the expense of the commerce and prosperity of the United States, I for one will count no cost in counteracting such government action on the part of Great Britain or any foreign power.

A few years earlier another great Democrat, President Polk, had said:

The enlightened policy by which a rapid communication with the various distant parts of the world is established by means of Americanbuilt steamers would find an ample reward in the increase of our commerce and in making our country and its resources more favorably known abroad. But the national advantage is still greater; having our naval officers made familiar with steam navigation and of having the privilege of taking the ships already equipped for immediate service at a moment's notice, and will be cheaply purchased by the compensation to be paid for the transportation of the mail over and above the postage received. A just national pride no less than our commercial interests would seem to favor the policy of augmenting the number of this description of vessels.

Whether President Polic or President Plane was right in Whether President Polk or President Pierce was right in estimating the value of this policy can be ascertained from the fact, that under the impulse of the ocean-mail subventions American steamships registered for foreign commerce increased from 5,631 tons in 1847 to 115,045 in 1855. President Pierce is quoted as proof that this policy was a "failure." But another famous Democrat and great economic authority, Dr. David A. Wells, declared:

During the single year 1849-50 we increased our ocean steam tonnage 113 per cent and the seagoing qualities and performances of our vessels were so admirable that the Cunard Company, which had then been in operation ten years, was obliged to bring out new ships to compete with them. The prospect, therefore, at one time was that the United States, although late in the start in this new department of foreign shipping, would soon equal, if not overtake, their great commercial competitor.

These new American steamships built under the mail subventions reduced the trans-Atlantic freight rate of the Cunard steamers from £7 10s. to £4 a ton. And Captain McKennon, of the British navy, who made voyages of observation for his Government to inspect the new American and the Cunard ships, declared that "there are no ocean steamers in England comparable to the Baltic." Both the best American and the best British authorities, therefore, refute President Pierce and sustain the statement expressed in the majority report of this committee that in the ocean-mail subventions of the years before the war the United States received "an abundant reward in increased maritime strength and increased commerce."

THE COLLINS SHIPS

The minority report declares—and the minority report seems to be very unfortunate in its specific statements:

In 1847 Collins and his associates agreed to carry the mails between New York and Liverpool twice a month during eight months of the year and once a month during four months for $385,000 per annum. He also agreed to build five ships of not less than 2,000 tons measurement and 1,000 horsepower. The company never performed its contract as to the new ships. It built four new ships, one of which was destroyed, and then proposed to build another in its stead, which would be the fifth new ship. In 1852 the contractors asked for an increase of pay from $385,000 per annum to $858,000 per annum, giving six additional trips to the twenty already provided for.

This assortion of the minority report that the Collins Com-

This assertion of the minority report that the Collins Company "never performed its contract as to the new ships" is not true. Mr. Collins agreed in his contract to build steamers of at least 2,000 tons-the average size of the competing British Cunard ships was then only 1,500 tons. But Mr. Collins actually built two steamers of 2,700 tons and two steamers of 2,800 tons, by far the largest, most costly, and most powerful vessels in the world. The ship mentioned in the minority report as "destroyed" was lost by shipwreck after running several years, and the Collins company was then building a fifth steamer, the Adriatic, of 4,100 tons, or twice as large as the original contract had required. It is a suggestive fact that the Adriatic was sold to a British subsidized company when the ultra-Southern influences in Congress broke down our ocean mail legislation. The Adriatic was the largest and best steamship under the British flag, and long held the Atlantic record in this British subsidized service

It is true that the Collins company asked for and received an increased subvention of $858,000 in 1852. But this was granted by Congress in part for the express reason that the Collins company had far exceeded its contract requirements, that it had built larger and faster ships than the Government had asked for, that these ships had won the mastery of the North Atlantic for America, that they had cut the freight rates on our exports in half, and that all this advantage gained to the American people and their Government deserved fair compensation, for it was stated and proved by detailed figures that to effect a saving of a day and a half in the run between New York and Liverpool costs the company nearly a million dollars annually." At this time the British Government paid the Cu-At this time the British Government paid the Cunard Company for ships smaller, slower, and inferior in every way to the Collins steamers a mail subvention of about $900,000 year, or $5.75 for every ton of Cunard shipping that crossed the ocean, while the Collins subvention was $4.82 a ton. It seemed to the American people and to Congress at that time that a superior service in American ships was worth at least as much to the people of the United States as a poorer service was to Great Britain. It would be very difficult for the minority of the committee to disprove this.

These mail subventions to American steamship lines need not have been "perpetual," as the minority report asserts, but they ought not to have been withdrawn, and would not have been withdrawn but for the bitter sectional strife in Congress at the very crisis of our fierce struggle with the British Government. A few years after the subventions were canceled and the American lines abandoned the New York Herald, then, as now, a Democratic newspaper, said:

And this recalls to mind the shameful fact that with the exception of two steamships, the Fulton and Arago, every steamship plying between this country and Europe belongs to foreign companies, and American citizens are compelled to sail under the flag of France or of England or the Hanse towns. This is the fault of Congress, which will not vote a dollar for an honorable enterprise like an American steamship line. or of England of the Hallse town.

which will not vote a dollar for an honorable enterprise like an American steamship line.

A subsidy of $500,000 a year sufficed to maintain the Collins line, which a narrow-minded Congress withdrew, and the last American flag at the masthead of an American steamship vanished from the Atlantic. The governments of England and France, and even the little Govern-ment of Italy, grant handsome subsidies to their mail steamship lines. Why not our Government do the same?

UNDER THE LAW OF 1891.

The minority report quotes Mr. John Wanamaker, when Postmaster-General in 1891, as saying that the early mail steamship subventions were terminated too soon "to demonstrate the gen-That is true. The first legislation eral effect of the system." was broken down finally by the sectional quarrel in Congress which preceded the civil war and which led also to the crippling of the Navy. This is not a fact which can be recalled with pride by any patriotic American, nor can the scandal which one time overwhelmed the Pacific line of steamers. But the ocean mail subvention policy was reestablished in 1891. The minority report quotes Postmaster-General Wanamaker as stating, in 1892, "the new ocean mail service, therefore, applies to eleven lines, comprising, when completed, forty-two ships, of 165,802 tonnage, and the contractors will be required to spend fourteen millions to provide ships necessary to make the service contracted for frequent enough and quick enough to comply with the terms agreed upon." The minority report goes on to say that "this was a very rosy view of the situation," and that "new ships are easily built on paper." This minority report further quotes Postmaster-General Bissell as saying, in his report for 1893, that:

I am unable to ascertain that any positive advantages have accrued from either a mail or a commercial point of view by reason of the contracts thus far placed in operation by the act of March 3, 1891.

Some of these contracts at that time had been only a few months in operation, and none more than a year or so in operation. The ocean mail law had been cut down one-third in its compensation, and thus seriously crippled, before being passed by the House of Representatives. Some of the new routes were immediately abandoned, as it was expected they would be, because the reduced compensation was manifestly inadequate. But the best test of the ocean mail law of 1891 is that it stood unchanged and unchallenged throughout Mr. Cleveland's Administration, when the McKinley tariff was overthrown, and that for sixteen years it has worked to the satisfaction of the Government.

The minority report states that Mr. Wanamaker was taking "a very rosy view of the situation" when he declared, in 1892, that the new ocean mail service would require forty-two ships of 165,802 tonnage, costing $14,000,000. "New ships are easily built on paper" jeers the minority report. Now, what are the facts? The Merchant Marine Commission, in memoranda presented a year ago, showed that the steamship companies operating this ocean mail service under the law of 1891 actually owned thirty-six steamships of a total tonnage of 164,923. Four of these steamships cost more than $2,000,000 each, or upward of $8,000,000 in all, while eight others cost about a million dollars each. So the only real fault to be found with Postmaster-General Wanamaker's statement was that it was an underestimate. In 1892 the United States had 228,000 tons of steamships registered for foreign trade. In 1905 it had 601,000 tons, and nearly all of this increase was due directly or indirectly to the ocean mail law of 1891 or to the anticipation of the passage of the Frye shipping bill of 1900.

THE AMERICAN LINE TO EUROPE.

In an attack upon the one American line to Europe the minority report declares that the subvention to this line for twelve years has been "a pure gratuity," because "no new ships have been built nor can the line which carries the contract compete in average rapidity of sailing with other ships which would carry the mail consigned to this subsidized company at a much lower rate.

Instead of "no new ships" four ships, and very large and fast ones, have been added to the American flag expressly for The New York and Philadelphia, of 10,700 tons, were transferred to American registry in 1895 by special act of Congress, because, being owned by Americans, they were refused all share in mail subsidies by the British Government. The St. Louis and St. Paul, of 11,600 tons, were constructed in the United States especially for this American trans-Atlantic service. Moreover, in anticipation of the passage of the Frye bill the International Mercantile Marine Company, owning these steamers, has since built also six large trans-Atlantic steamships, the Finland and Kroonland, of 12,700 tons, and the Maine, Missouri, Massachusetts, and Mississippi, of 7,900 tons. The statement that no new ships had been built under this mail subvention on the North Atlantic is an amazing error, for which it is difficult to find excuse.

So, too, with the statement in the minority report that this 20-knot American line provides a slow and inferior service.

There are a few individual steamers on the north Atlantic which are faster than any ships of the American fleet, but, as the Merchant Marine Commission said in its memoranda, in the Fifty-ninth Congress, first session (Senate Document No. 141)

It is a significant fact that now, after ten years, the American Line is still performing the only 20-knot weekly mail service between the United States and Europe.

The Commission added:

The Commission added:

Occasional faster passages are made by individual ships of foreign lines, but in the important charcteristic of regularity, swiftness, and reliability of service the American line still stands preeminent. It is the only line whose ships steadily deliver across the Atlantic mails that started one week before. According to the report of the superintendent of foreign mails, the three fast steamers of the North German Lloyd made thirty passages in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905; the one fast steamer of the Hamburg-American, eight passages; the two fast steamers of the Cunard, twenty-five passages; the two fast steamers of the American Line, forty-five passages; the four fast steamers of the American Line, forty-five passages. This report of the superintendent of foreign mails shows further that the two British companies presented for the mails last year on twenty-four passages ships of 16 or 17 knots, which would reach the other side two or three days behind the American liners. The German service is often performed, especially in the stormy winter months, by steamers even slower.

Therefore the minority report is very unjust to the American Line of steamships in asserting that it can not "compete in average rapidity of sailing with other ships which would carry the mails consigned to this subsidized company at a much lower These "other ships," of course, are foreign ships, and it would have been more frank and creditable to the authors of the minority report if they had openly stated, instead of concealing the fact, that these "other ships" were of European nationality. That these foreign steamers, fast or slow, could afford to carry the United States mails "at a much lower rate than American steamers" will readily be admitted when these circumstances, set forth by the Merchant Marine Commission, are understood:

There is another fact brought up in this report which is well worth considering. It is that while the United States paid in the last fiscal year $662,000 to the American line for carrying our trans-Atlantic malls, it paid nearly as much, or $617,000, to the British, French, and German lines, thus to that extent assisting foreign governments to maintain just the class of scouts which Admiral Dewey and the general board so emphatically declare will be indispensable to the efficiency of our squadrons in time of war. In other words, we are deliberately adding foreign governments to maintain an auxiliary naval fleet, which, in case of a conflict, could be used with terrible force against us, and steamers which are direct competitors with American industry. These foreign governments on their side recognize the truth of this by refusing to contribute to the maintenance of American steamers, and by denying the malls and the mail compensation to our vessels, even when they are faster than their own. * *

Under this policy—so much more liberal than that of the British and other foreign governments—the United States last year gave in mail pay $212,000 to the White Star (British) Line, $168,000 to the North German Lloyd Line, $101,000 to the Cumard (British) Line, $64,000 to the Hamburg-American (German) Line, and $60,000 to the Compagnic Générale Transatlantique.

The American line in return received $10,511 from the British and nothing from the French Government, only $1,614 being received for the mails originating in interior Europe and delivered to the American ships at Cherbourg.

Clearly this is not reciprocity, and in deciding what is adequate mail pay for the American line it must be remembered that these American ships are systematically boycotted by foreign governments, while the United States pay upward of $600,000 a year to their British, German, and French competitors.

Most of these facts and figures were easily ascertainable from the report of the superintendent of foreign mails, from which the minority report has quoted, and it is all the more deplorable, therefore, that the minority has allowed itself to make this attack upon the one American line to Europe, and, in effect, to demand that its mail subvention should be withdrawn and the line destroyed by its European competitors, which, besides their own state aid, receive liberal mail pay from our Government. Not since the earlier American trans-Atlantic steamship lines were broken down in the heat of the sectional controversy in Congress before the civil war has a Congressional report contained such a severe blow at American shipping interests. is based manifestly upon a misapprehension of the facts. minority has apparently been deceived by influences not friendly to the American merchant marine.

LATIN-AMERICAN TRADE.

On the question of commerce the minority report asserts:

On the question of commerce the minority report asserts:

Notwithstanding the fact that for many years we have had subsidized mail lines running to Mexico, the West Indies, and Central and South America, the balance of trade with these countries has been all the time largely against us. This is true individually and in the aggregate, in spite of the fact that our relations have become more intimate with Mexico on account of greatly improved railway connections, and that as a result of our treaty with Cuba we have special trade advantages with that part of the West Indies.

This assertion ignores the very great increase in our exports to the Latin-American countries to which lines of American mail steamers are running. Take Cuba, for instance. Our exports to that island increased from $12,000,000 in 1891 to ports to that island increased from $12,000,000 in 1891 to $24,000,000 in 1893 under the impulse of improved steamship communication plus the reciprocity treaty which the Cleveland Administration abolished in 1894. Our exports to Cuba in 1905 were $38,000,000, and to the transportation of these articles the Ward Line of American mail steamers was the largest single contributor. More than half of our exports to Cuba are carried in American vessels. There is an American mail line also to Mexico, to which country our exports, largely carried, of course, by railroads, though great quantities go by sea, have increased from $15,000,000 in 1891 to $45,000,000 in 1905. The balance of trade with most of these Latin-American countries is against us, naturally enough, because they are relatively poor countries and not great purchasers of foreign products, but it is significant that wherever there is an American ocean mail line we lead European countries in their markets, and that wherever we have no American line European countries lead us. One needs but to compare our share of the import trade of Colombia and Venezuela on the one hand and of Brazil and Argentina on the other. To deny that steamship lines promote trade is equivalent to denying that transportation promotes trade, and except for the spirit of controversy not one member of the minority would dream of subscribing to such a proposition.

MORE ERRORS OF THE MINORITY.

In an effort to explain why no more American ships are built the minority report suggests that one reason is that "American capital finds more profitable employment on shore than in maritime pursuits." This is an explanation always eagerly suggested by the active agents here of foreign subsidized steamship companies, but it is demolished by the fact, perfectly well known and indeed mentioned in the minority report, that "millions of dollars" of American money is invested in foreign ocean shipping. Another explanation is outlined thus in the minority report:

The other answer is that by virtue of the unjust protection given to the producers of materials which enter into the building of ships the trusts and combines are enabled to sell and do sell their products in foreign lands at prices below those charged to domestic purchasers. That this is true has been long and well established.

Such an assertion as this, that the materials of shipbuilding for foreign trade are dutiable, is amazing, for the signers of this minority report sat day by day with other members of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries last April and heard the chief shipbuilders of the country state that all materials of any kind required for the construction, equipment, or repair of vessels for the foreign trade could be admitted free under sections 12 and 13 of the free list of the Dingley tariff, and that this provision was so liberally interpreted that it included not only timber and steel, but such elaborate articles as compasses for ships' use. Moreover, these shipbuilders testified that they were getting their steel laid down in their yards by American makers not only for foreign-going, but for domestic ships, at the same prices for which similar materials could be laid down duty free from Europe. Finally Judge Gary, of the United States Steel Corporation, appeared before the committee and stated that his great company was not selling American ship steel abroad at a lower price than at home, as had been charged; that in fact his company had sold only a small quantity of such steel abroad at any price in recent years. That in the face of testimony like this the minority report should declare that the tariff robs the shipbuilders in its burdens on their materials is something which it is difficult to reconcile with the unquestioned sincerity of purpose of the individual members of the minority. These and other errors in specific statements in which the minority report abounds can be explained only on the theory that the report was hastily compiled and that some of the information came from influences that were so eager to strike a blow at the American merchant marine that they forgot that their excessive zeal might prove embarrassing to the gentlemen who signed the report when its text came up for examination in the House of Representatives

The whole report is an extreme argument against, not particular schedules nor particular tariffs, but the principle of protection and in favor of free trade.

Let the tariff bars be put down, so that commerce is no longer shackled, and American ships can have an incoming as well as an outgoing cargo.

This is the assertion on one page, and on two pages before the report declares of Mexico, the West Indies, and Central and South America that-

The balance of trade with these countries has been all the time largely against us.

It is fair to assume that a different brain framed and a different hand penned these two assertions, for they collide completely and destroy each other with neatness and dispatch; that the tariff shackles commerce and prevents American ships from securing incoming cargoes, and that the balance of trade with Latin-America is heavily against us can not both be true at the same time. What is true, as the official statistics disclose, is that 84 per cent of our entire imports from South America are free of duty, 72 per cent of our imports from Japan, and 66 per cent of our imports from China. Thirty-nine per cent of our imports from Australasia are free of duty, and 87 per cent from the Philippines. There is not very much shackling of commerce in these official records of our trade with the countries to which the proposed American mail services are to be established.

One further point, to show how much more zeal than discretion has gone to the compilation of this minority report, is this quotation from Daniel Webster in 1816, as follows:

How, sir, do shipowners and navigators accomplish this? How is it that they are able to meet and in some measure to overcome universal competition. Not, sir, by protection and bounties, but by unwaried exertion, by extreme economy, by unshaken perseverance, by that manly and resolute spirit which relies on itself to protect itself.

At the time when these eloquent words were spoken the discriminating-duty system, for which mail subventions or subsidies are the modern world-wide substitute, was in the full vigor of enforcement for the upbuilding of the merchant shipping of America. Under that system a foreign vessel arriving at an American port paid 10 per cent above the regular rate of customs duties on its cargo, and in addition a foreign vessel paid a tonnage tax of 50 cents a ton, while an American vessel paid only 6 cents. Nor was this all. In the great East India trade there were especial discriminating duties on tea, then the chief article of import merchandise, so that an American vessel homeward bound from China or India would pay on arrival $10,980 at the custom-house, while a foreign vessel with the same cargo of tea would pay $27,800, or, in other words, the American ship had the advantage of what was equivalent to a subsidy of about $17,000 for a single voyage. This was not merely protection, it was absolute prohibition of foreign ship-This was not ping in the ocean trade of the United States, and it was this which built up the mighty American fleet in whose prowess Daniel Webster exulted. If there ever was a protected industry-jealously, lavishly protected-it was the American merchant marine in the years when our flag flew on all the seas of the world. There is something deliciously humorous in winding up with Webster's eulogy of such shipping an earnest disquisition on the beauties of free trade.

THE "FREE-SHIP" RECOMMENDATION.

The minority report is notable as the first declaration to which Democrats have subscribed their names in Congress for a long time in favor of the most extreme form of a free-ship policy, or absolute free trade in shipping. The minority mempolicy, or absolute free trade in shipping. The minority members of the Merchant Marine Commission did not advocate this and presumably did not favor it. But the minority report of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries declares:

If we can pay ocean freight and sell steam engines, steel bridges, sewing machines, and many other articles to foreign purchasers, why can not we build ships? If we can not, then there never was a better time than now to return to the free-ship policy, under which every other nation with a merchant marine has built it up.

Now, let us examine this paragraph in detail. In the first place, the manifest reason why we can sell steam engines, steel bridges, sewing machines, etc., abroad in competition with for-eigners is that for many years the manufacture of these things has been a vigorously protected industry and that the immense volume of American production of these things and the intense competition of home makers of them have brought the prices down, just as protectionists predicted.

But the shipping trade, so far as over-sea commerce is concerned, has not been protected, and therefore we have built few ships, and because we have built few ships these American vessels cost more than foreign vessels. Therefore the minority report urges Congress "to return to the free-ship policy." Apparently the gentlemen who drew this report believe that we had free ships in the days of Democratic ascendency before the civil war. They were never more mistaken in their lives. The present navigation laws which they denounce were framed not under Lincoln and Chase and Seward in 1861, but under Washington and Jefferson and Madison in 1789 and 1790. The law which restricts American registry to American-built vessels has been the unbroken policy of the American Government for more than a hundred years. This reference to a "return" to the than a hundred years. This reference to a "return" to the "free-ship policy" is another token that the minority report was hastily prepared or that the gentlemen responsible for it were grievously misled by informants to whom they had trusted.

There is still further proof of this in the assertion that "every other nation with a merchant marine has built it up" under a free-ship policy. This again is wide from the facts.

wooden sail vessels, built to great advantage in the United States, did the world's carrying. She did not actually open her registry to foreign-built vessels until 1854, when she felt safe, because she clearly saw that the advantage had shifted to steamships and iron-ship yards developed by lavish British mail subventions. British merchants have never been large purchasers of foreign vessels, except when Anglo-Confederate cruisers drove American clippers from the seas in 1862-1865.

France tried free ships, with the result that she had a smaller shipping in 1881 (914,000 tons) than she had in 1870 (1,072,000 Then she turned to subsidies, with the result that her shipping has now increased to 1,760,000 tons.

Germany tried free ships, with the result that her tonnage increased only from 1,098,000 in 1873 to 1,243,000 in 1881. Then Bismarck urged subsidies and secured them, and also other aids to the merchant marine, so that German tonnage has now grown to 3,400,000 tons.

Italy saw her tonnage dwindle under free ships and turned to subsidies because free ships had failed. She had 860,000 tons of shipping in 1894 and 1,259,000 tons in 1904.

Norway, long pointed to as a brilliant free-ship example, because her tonnage grew from 1,022,000 in 1870 to 1,650,000 in 1880 through the purchase of sail ships discarded by America and England, saw her fleet increase scarcely at all under free ships from 1,650,000 in 1890 to 1,779,000 in 1904. Now, Norway also, though she can ill afford it, grants mail subventions; and Sweden lends money from the public treasury to create new lines of steamers.

Japan under free ships had only 200,000 tons of shipping, mostly coastwise, in 1894. In 1896, taught by the Chinese war, Japan adopted the most comprehensive subsidy system in the world, with the result that her merchant fleet has grown more rapidly than any other in the world, or from 200,000 tons to more than 1,000,000 tons.

In the face of these facts and figures it is mirth provoking to read that foreign governments have "built up" their merchant tonnage under free ships.

The minority report denounces the "restrictive policy" of denying American citizens who own foreign ships the right to sail their vessels under the American flag. "It is estimated," sail their vessels under the American flag. "It is estimated," says the report, "that there are not less than 200,000 tons engaged in foreign commerce under foreign flags owned in this country and expatriated by these repressive laws." If these vessels are "expatriated," it is because their owners deliberately choose this, for ever one of them declared only two years ago, in reply to specific questions from the Merchant Marine Commission, that they would not transfer their foreign-built vessels to the American flag under a free-ship law. They could not give up their advantage of foreign cheap wages or subsidies without Ameri-

Here is a statement of value coming from a great Democrat: SECRETARY HERBERT ON THE COST OF SHIPS.

The minority report of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries assalls this bill for requiring that the mail ships built as auxiliary cruisers or for other war purposes on plans and specifications approved by the Navy Department must be built in the United States. The minority regards this as fostering monopoly—American monopoly—in shipbuilding.

On August 3, 1886, Congress enacted a law requiring that our steel cruisers and battle ships, with their engines, guns, and armor, should hereafter be of exclusively American material. Hon. Hilary A. Herbert, of Alabama, long chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and subsequently Secretary of the Navy in President Cleveland's Cabinet, said of the result of this law in a report of February 13, 1893:

The requirement was severe, but time has proven it to have been wise. Every vessel put afloat under the law of August 3, 1886, and subsequent acts, has been homemade throughout, and there is not one of them that will not compare favorably with the best vessels of like type manufactured in other countries during the same time.

Colonel Herbert added on the question of the cost of ships and Another result still more gratifying and highly encouraging to those who believe with your committee in a still further increase of the Navy is that, since Secretary Whitney began his system of contracting for vessels in 1886, the price of the materials entering into the composition of a modern ship has been reduced fully one-half, and the price of a completed ship, excluding armor, has gone down 33 per cent.

FREE TRADE GONE MAD.

It is worthy of remark that in advocating an extreme freeship policy for the proposed ocean mail lines, and also in demanding that the present mail subvention to the one American line to Europe be withdrawn and all our United States mails turned over to foreign ships, most of them slower, if they can be carried more cheaply, the minority report goes to the very limit der a free-ship policy. This again is wide from the facts.

Great Britain forbade free ships throughout the years when by any other people or practiced by any other government.

In the first place, even those foreign governments which pursue a general free-ship policy make an exception of their national mail lines subsidized from the public treasury, and require that their ships shall be home built—if indeed they have any shipyards capable of constructing them. Thus Great Britain, in the contract with the Cunard Line, requires that these liners shall be "built in the United Kingdom." And Germany, which pays $1,350,000 to the North German Lloyd for a service in 15-knot steamers to Australia and the Orient, requires in section 13 of the contract that "the new steamers to be established in the lines must be built in German shipyards and as far as possible by the employment of German materials." The minority report, therefore, would have the United States go not as far as Great Britain and Germany go in the matter of free ships, but a great deal further, to the complete abandonment of American shipyards and the absolute destruction of this great and essential industry.

This present bill, like our existing ocean mail law, requires that the ships built to perform our mail service shall be built on designs and specifications approved by the Navy Department with reference to the use of these ships in time of war. It would be a delightful thing to see the plans and specifications of an auxiliary cruiser or fast transport or ammunition ship of the United States turned over to British or German or Japanese shipbuilders to execute, while our own yards were closed up and thousands of skilled American mechanics were thrown out upon the street. Yet that is the policy which the minority report of this committee deliberately advocates in the face of the repudiation of such free-ship madness by every government which has shipyards of its own.

The extreme and extraordinary character of this report is further illustrated in the argument referred to elsewhere, that if European steamships heavily subsidized can, because of the subsidies and their low wages, carry the United States mails more cheaply than American vessels, they ought to be allowed to do so, our lines abandoned, our flag withdrawn from the sea, and the officers and men of our Naval Reserve deprived of their rightful employment.

Now the American people, or the very great majority of them, believe in the general policy of protecting American industries. We are a protectionist nation—the greatest, most thoroughgoing protectionist nation in the world. Great Britain, on the other hand, is a free-trade nation—the only free-trade nation in Yet when some years ago subsidized French steamers and German steamers offered to carry the British mails for a smaller price than that which British steamers were receiving, the proposition was spurned by the British people and literally hooted out of Parliament

As one wrathful British statesman put it (Mr. Crawford in the House of Commons):

Now, what I desire to do on this occasion is to protest in the name of what I consider to be the interests of the country and the interest of commerce, and in justice to our own companies, against the ships of the Messageries Imperiales, or of any foreign company, being employed in the conveyance of our eastern mails. [Loud cheers from all parts of the house.] You may carry the principle of economy too far. [Hear! Hear!] Such a course of proceedings would be free trade gone mad. [Renewed cheers.]

Now, what the minority of this committee deliberately propose to the Government of the United States is that we, that this Congress, that this House, shall adopt a policy of "free trade gone mad," repudiated by the British Government and rejected as suicidal by every other strong nation beneath the sun.

Let us see what Germany has done.

GERMAN SHIP PROTECTION.

Kuhlow's German Trade Review, speaking of the subsidized German mail lines to the East Indies, says:

German mail lines to the East Indies, says:

Of particular importance in the development of German trade with China is the position occupied by German steamers and coasters. The number, and particularly the carrying capacity, of the German steamers which afford communication between Germany and China, or which transport foreign goods to the latter country, is very largely increasing. The success attained by the subsidized steamers of the North German Lloyd Company deserves to be specially referred to, for over a year the four-weekly service has appeared to be insufficient. The quantity of cargo offered from Bremerhaven direct to Hongkong and Shanghai, and vice versa, is so great that the intermediate ports can only be relatively little provided for. The passenger traffic of the English and French lines has also been surpassed. Of the first importance is the circumstance that German shipowners have attained a very influential position in the whole of the coasting trade of China.

Describing European subsidies to steamships Kuhlow's adds:

Describing European subsidies to steamships, Kuhlow's adds:

In the United States it is otherwise. That country pays no subsidies. The tremendous decline in American foreign shipping is doubtless in part owing to that circumstance. In 1858 the net capacity of the United States vessels was 2,301,148 tons, in 1868 it had fallen to 1,494,389 tons, in 1878 it was 1,589,348 tons, and in 1888 only 1,072,104 tons. It is of course true that this decline is partly due to the American laws respecting foreign-built ships and the consequent inability of the American shipowner to compete on equal terms with foreigners, but there can be no question that the subsidies granted to European ships by the several European governments has largely contributed to securing for the European mercantile marine the enormous preponderance it at present enjoys. The fact that for some years Germany has adopted a similar course to that of other European nations, aiding her merchant fleet in its competition, smoothing its paths, and in that way facilitating the sound progress of German trade and industry, deserves the warmest recognition.

Hon. Richard Guenther, American consul-general at Frankfort, says in a report of February 27, 1905:

says in a report of February 27, 1905:

Ocean traffic of German steamships.—The traffic of the three ocean steamship lines receiving subsidies from the German Government, according to official statistics for the year 1903, was as follows: The East Asiatic line carried 179,492 tons of merchandise, valued at $56,644,000, and 19,195 passengers; the Australian line carried 134,312 tons of freight, valued at $25,496,000, and 12,730 passengers; the East African line carried 126,117 tons of freight, valued at $15,411,000, and 16,195 passengers. The values of precious metals and bulllon carried are not included. The bulk of the merchandise carried outward was German, and the freights on the home trips were to a lafge part destined for Germany. These German steamships touch at many intermediate foreign ports to take or discharge freight and passengers.

HOW GERMAN STEAMSHIP COMPANIES AIDED SPAIN.

HOW GERMAN STEAMSHIP COMPANIES AIDED SPAIN.

Two great foreign steamship companies which have bitterly fought the encouragement of American shipping are the Hamburg-American, of Hamburg, and the North German Llyed, of Bremen, the latter subsidized for $1,350,000 a year for a 15-knot mail service to the East Indies and Australia. The New York manager of the Hamburg-American Company, Mr. Emil Boas, published in the New York Herald a few weeks ago a violent attack on the American shipping bill.

Both of the great German steamship companies owe their wealth and power chiefly to the patronage of American merchants and travelers. Yet in the crisis of our war with Spain in 1898 both companies took fast ships out of their New York service—ships built for and supported by American patrongeand transferred them to the Spanish Government. Some of these ships were used to reinforce Admiral Camara, who sailed from Cadiz to attack Admiral Dewey at Manila, but was halted at the Suez Canal by the news of the destruction of Cervera's ships off Santiago and our threatened attack on the coast of Spain.

A. G. Maginnis, in the Atlantic Ferry, published by Whit-taker & Co., London, 1900, speaking of the Hamburg-American Company and its trans-Atlantic service, chapter 9, page 27, says:

Two of these vessels were named the Columbia and Normannia, and were sold to the Spanish Government in the spring of 1898 for £450,000, and were renamed the Rapido and the Patriota.

In 1899 the Normannia was purchased from the Spanish by the French Compagnia Générale Transatlantique for their New York expresservice and renamed L'Aquitaine, and in the same year the Columbia was bought back by the Hamburg-American line.

In 1898 the Havel (of the North German Lloyd) was sold to the Spanish Government.

FOREIGN OPPOSITION TO AMERICAN SHIPPING,

The real head and front of opposition in this country to the protection and encouragement of American shipping always has been, is, and always will be the rich and powerful steamship companies, most of them subsidized by their own foreign gov-This fact has time and time again been freely ernments. mitted. Thus the American correspondent of the London Times, in discussing a previous shipping bill, in March, 1902, while telling foreign shipowners that President Roosevelt was in favor of protecting the merchant marine, congratulated them on the fact that-

The whole free trade or antiprotection opinion of the country is against it, which includes the Democratic party, the strong minority of the Senate and House of Representatives, and a very powerful, able, the loss of the country of the senate and House of Representatives, and a very powerful, able,

This American correspondent of the London Times added frankly

The failure of Mr. Frye's previous bill was thought to be due in no small measure to the active and very intelligent opposition of English and foreign steamship companies. Their managers thought their interests jeopardized by that bill. They are understood to hold the same opinion with reference to the present bill, and to be not less vigilant than they were last year in looking after their imperiled interests. The lobby system of Washington is such as to make an opposition of that kind efficient, quite irrespective of nationality. It must be added that the ship-subsidy bill does not stand alone. No measure stands alone. There is none for which votes may not be had or withheld with reference to the obtaining or refusing of votes for other bills whose fate is also uncertain. also uncertain.

Let me now point out how cordially free-trade England and her great men recognize that our opponents here are their friends.

HOW FOREIGNERS DEPEND UPON THE WESTERN STATES OF AMERICA TO OPPOSE PROTECTING OUR MERCHANT MARINE AND TO PERPETUATE FOREIGN STEAMSHIP MONOPOLY OF OUR COMMERCE.

At the annual meeting of the Association of Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom in London on March 4, 1902, the president of the chamber, Lord Avebury, speaking of shipping subsidies and subventions in general, and especially of a prospect that the United States might sometime extend its protective policy to include the merchant marine, said that he "did not anticipate that the nonmaritime States would remain passive and see nine millions in bounty go to the maritime States without protest."

Here is a frank British declaration that British shipowners depend upon the sectional jealousy of our Western agricultural States to defeat the growth of the American merchant marine and to prevent any competition with British ships by American shipowners and sailors.

HOW THE MIDDLE WEST IS HURT.

This lack of regular American steamship lines to South America, run under our own flag, by our own people, in the interests of our own country, hurts the maritime States, but it also injures directly, in a serious way, the producing interests of the Mississippi Valley and the inland States in general. Thus A. A. Eberson & Co., paint manufacturers of St. Louis, decided recently to establish a manufacturing plant in London. When the head of the firm was asked the reason for this he

Under existing conditions as to shipping facilities in the United States I believe there is more money for us to manufacture for export in England than here.

You manufacture in the United States and look for American ships to take your goods, and you do not find them. If you want to freight by ships you must turn to foreigners. That's something for the opponents of the American ship-subsidy bill to think about. It is a fact that has determined more than one American manufacturer to establish plants in England, for we are not the only ones who are going over there.

The foreign steamship companies that do not want this occan mail bill to pass—like the foreign shipowners who monopolize our trade through a foreign combine or trust between New York and South America—tell the Representatives of the Middle West that the West has no interest in an American merchant marine, that this bill is only "graft" for the benefit of New England, New York, and Pennsylvania, and that the Mississippi Valley and the prairie States ought to join with this foreign steamship combine and with the subsidized companies of England, France, Germany, and Japan to defeat in this House all legislation for the protection and encourage-ment of American shipping. That is what they tell you in the marked copies of their newspaper organ that they are con-stantly sending to you from New York. Do you believe them, or do you believe this St. Louis manufacturer?

United States during the same period, estimated at $2,500,000, but two cargoes, each with less than 1,000,000 feet of lumber, came in American sailing vessels. The great bulk of the exports from and imports into the United States, so far at least as Uruguay is concerned, is carried in foreign ships. Only a few days ago the Government of Argentina passed a law granting a subsidy amounting to about $58,000 gold monthly for a term of ten years available to two steamship lines plying between that country and Europe, all because the people of Europe are energetic and looking to their own best interests. My remedy for all this is:

this is:

First. Establish a line of American steamships for passengers, freight, and mall between New York and the River Plata (the mail received October 6 was posted at New York September 2), and in that way make this great market within easy reach of ours, and provide the American people with a more rapid and easy means of communication with this portion of our continent, of which most of our people know so little.

Second. Send here good American agents, with business training and experience; let them establish permanent houses, and give these people to know and to understand that they are here to stay, to cater to their wants and to supply them.

CONSUL GUENTHER'S TESTIMONY.

Another Daily Consular and Trade Report says:

Another Daily Consular and Trade Report says:

Germany has forty-three large steamships in her South American service, and six more are nearly ready for launching. The forty-nine vessels aggregate 217,195 gross tons. Most of them are of recent construction, nineteen having been built in the years 1900 to 1905. They ply on four routes, all starting from Hamburg, connecting the latter port with the La Plata States and Brazil. Germany's flourishing export trade to South America, it is believed, is mainly due to this direct and prompt transportation service. In a letter furnishing the foregoing information consul Guenther, of Frankfort, Germany, says that an English journal, speaking on this service, quotes the following from an American merchant in Buenos Aires:

"We here have no parcels-post connection with the United States, lacking which my firm is obliged to order every year many thousand dollars worth of goods from Europe which I would prefer to get from home. We even have no regular mail service with the United States, Reply letters from there take three months ere they reach us here, whereas letters from Europe consume only a fortnight in getting here. Steamers from the United States always contain petroleum in their cargo, and for that reason are not allowed to enter the inner harbor, but are obliged to discharge their freight on lighters, which causes delay and inconvenience. Goods arriving from Europe can be disposed of within five days while goods from New York require four weeks after their arrival here before we can dispose of them. That this condition handleaps trade with the United States needs no further demonstration."

OUR MINISTER TO CHILE.

Hon. John Hicks, our minister to Chile, emphasizes the need of an American ocean mail service on the west coast of South America in the Daily Consular and Trade Reports of December 11, 1905:

One of the great difficulties in the way of a closer commercial connection between the United States and Chile is in the lack of good shipping facilities. The passenger and much of the freight traffic of the entire west coast of South America is in the hands of two companies, the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, English, and the South American Steamship Company, a Chilean corporation. Both companies receive a subsidy from the Chilean Government and they alternate in the dispatch of ships between Panama and Valparaiso. Naturally they are in a combination or trust, and it seems difficult to bring about any change or improvement in their methods of doing business. When these steamers take from twenty-five to thirty days between Panama and Valparaiso it can readily be seen that American trade must suffer, for the trip could easily be made in ten days. So long as this condition exists and steamers can come from Europe almost as quickly it will be a difficult matter to increase American business on this coast.

OUR CONSUL AT MONTEVIDEO.

Consul O'Hara, at Montevideo, explains the relatively small trade between Uruguay and the United States as due primarily to lack of swift and regular steamship communication, and also to the fact that Great Britain, France, Germany, and Italy have merchants of their own nationality in Uruguay representing their steamships and pushing their goods and doing their utmost to prevent the sale of American merchandise. The consul says, in the Daily Consular and Trade Reports of December 11, 1905:

consul says, in the Daily Consular and Trade Reports of December 11, 1905:

The same people who push our merchandise aside and force that of others to the front push our country aside and say that while we are a great producing nation we have no facilities for marketing our products. Here we are forced to silence. The records show that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, there were exported from this country to the United States goods to the value of $3,998,175 American gold, and that not one dollar's worth of this amount left this port on an American vessel.

It is estimated that not 1 per cent of North Americans who travel abroad include South American in their itinerary, while not more than 20 per cent of Latin Americans traveling abroad seek the United States in their voyaging. Although more of them come to us, except in the case of Mexico, than we send to them, interchange of travel is so small as to have little beneficial effect. There are several reasons for this condition, among which is our lack of steamship facilities.

On this point, indeed, too much can not be said, not only because it is very important, but because it can and should be immediately changed. The advantage is now entirely with Europe, and the disadvantage is wholly with the United States. This is not in any sense an argument for or against so-called "ship subsidies," but a plain, square statement of fact. At the present time there is not one first-class, fast, up-to-date express passenger or mall steamer running between any North American port and the ports of the great nations of South America. In contrast to this is to be noted the remarkable fact that Europe has nine different lines of large, commodious, modern, fast steamers giving frequent and excellent service between its chief ports and those of Latin America. Many of these boats will rival those of the northern transation this is to be noted the remarkable fact that Europe has nine different lines of large, commodious, modern, fast steamers giving frequent and excelle

AMERICAN SHIPPING FACILITIES TO SOUTH AMERICA.

All authorities agree that the present ocean mail service of the United States to South America on both coasts is ridiculously inadequate and unworthy of a great government. Postmaster-General Cortelyou, who spoke emphatically in his annual report for 1905 of the wretched character of the mail service offered by the foreign steamship companies running tramp craft between here and Brazil and Argentina, says in his annual report for 1906:

report for 1906:

Foreign governments are steadily increasing the speed of their fast mall steamers and requiring them to have fixed and regular sailings. The mail steamers of other countries leaving ports of the United States will more and more absorb our foreign mail transportation until such time as the United States provides an adequate compensation for the outward voyage on steamers of equal speed and regularity of sailings. Congress authorized the Postmaster-General by the act of 1891 to contract with owners of American steamships for ocean mail service, and has realized the impracticability of commanding suitable steamers in the interests of the postal service alone by requiring that such steamers shall be of a size, class, and equipment which will promote commerce and become available as auxiliary cruisers of the Navy in case of need. The compensation allowed to such steamers is found to be wholly inadequate to secure the proposals contemplated. This is especially true with regard to Australasia and several of the countries of South America with which we have cordial relations, and which, for manifest reasons, should have direct mail communication connections with us. The unprecedent expansion of trade and foreign commerce justifies the prompt consideration of an adequate foreign mail service. Expenditures to this end seem fully warranted also from the standpoint of a proper naval establishment, inasmuch as the vessels performing service are so built as to be readily converted into auxiliary cruisers. Favorable legislation on this subject is urgently needed.

Yet it can be said that our policy is in favor of protection for

Yet it can be said that our policy is in favor of protection for shipping no less than for agriculture and manufacturing.

Protection is the fixed policy of the United States. duties laid for the encouragement of American agriculture prevent shipowners and seamen of the coast from bringing freely their supplies of wool from Argentina or Australia, or vegetables and provisions from the ports of Canada. Shipowners and seamen acquiesce in this policy, because they regard the welfare of the farmers of the Middle West—of Illinois and Indiana and Iowa—and of the ranchmen of the Rocky Mountain States as of more importance than the prosperity of their competitors in Argentina or Canada.

But if American shipowners and seamen thus willingly pay whatever cost there may be in protection, and in addition build their ships in a protected country, and officer and man them at rates of wages established by protected standards of living, it is manifestly so unjust as to be indefensible to deny to these shipowners and seamen, in their fierce competition with their rivals of other lands, the protection and encouragement which the laws of the United States, with the approval of an over-whelming majority of the people of the United States, throw around every other industry. If it is right and profitable to protect agriculture and manufacturing by Federal legislation, it is right and proper also to protect that other great industry of building, owning, and sailing ocean ships, which, as a matter of fact, antedates not only manufacturing but agriculture in the history of the American people on this continent.

AMERICAN SHIPS FOR AMERICAN COMMERCE,

AMERICAN SHIPS FOR AMERICAN COMMERCE.

[From pages 555-560 of Hearings before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, April 4-13, 1906.]

One of the most important features of the voluminous testimony taken all over the country by the Merchant Marine Commission was the insistence of practical men of business—merchants and manufacturers and bankers—not themselves interested in any way in shipowning or shipbuilding, that the lack of American ships prevented us from securing an adequate market abroad for the products of American manufacturing, mining, and agriculture.

These practical business men were familiar with the argument of academic free traders and of foreign steamship managers against encouragement to the American merchant marine, that foreigners were carrying our ocean commerce cheaply for us, and that therefore they ought to have a perpetual monopoly of it. But these manufacturers, merchants, and bankers interested in our export trade know, first, that foreign steamship companies do not carry our own products as cheaply as they carry the products of their own countries if they can help it, and that in a great many instances the foreigners do not supply ships to carry our trade at all, or furnish only worn-out uneconomical vessels, discarded from their own service and sent over here as good enough for the United States, which is helpless because it has no shipping of its own.

These facts are well understood in the seaboard States. its own.

discarded from their own service and sent over here as good enough for the United States, which is helpless because it has no shipping of its own.

These facts are well understood in the seaboard States. They are also understood by the practical business men of the interior, as is demonstrated by the following testimony of middle-western business men before the Merchant Marine Commission.

Mr. James A. Patton, of the Chicago Board of Trade:

"I would be heartly in favor of granting a subsidy to ships sailing from our ports to South America, because our manufacturers have no facilities for shipping there, and we could in that way increase our manufactures all over the country. The shipments of agricultural implements alone from the city of Chicago are enormous."

Mr. Charles L. Pack, of Cleveland, lumberman (at Cleveland, June 28, 1904):

"Most of you know that the region of greatest lumber production in the whole country is the Southern States. The production of lumber there in 1903 was over 10,000,000,000 feet, which is an enormous quantity. If this southern lumber alone were loaded on cars, with the normal load of a car, the train would extend all the way from New York to San Francisco.

"About one-tenth of that lumber is exported. About 1,000,000,000 feet were exported in 1903, and the export trade from the southern ports have been the safeguard of the lumber business in the South for the last twenty years, for the reason that it has taken a good deal of production that we could not well use at home, and the foreign demand has often been good when our demand at home was very poor.

"This export business is very much handicapped because it has to be done to a large extent in tramp steamers. That 1,000,000,000 feet of lumber goes to a very large portion of the world. Last year the exports from the Southern States went to over 150 different foreign ports in Europe, in Asia, as far east as the Straits Settlements, and to both coasts of Africa, and the export would have been very much increased if we had had line the orders. Oftentimes orders are canceled for lack of regular shipping facilities."

Mr. Grasselli, of Cleveland, president of the Grasselli Chemical Com-

Mr. Grasselli, of Cleveland, president of the Grasselli Chemical Company:

"Bear in mind that in order to make shipments to South American ports, with some few exceptions, Americans are compelled to forward the goods to some European port, from which it is sent on to South America. The handicap to American industry becomes a very serious question, and when it is considered that foreign steamship lines are owned and controlled by corporations favorable to the countries to whom they belong and interested in their exports and in their own products, they do not give to the export of the American product the same careful handling and consideration that they naturally do their own; this resulting in the American goods arriving in more or less damaged condition, due to repeated and careless handling, thus causing another serious obstacle in our export business. Besides, with our own fing flying over her, the American ship, in a sense an extension of our own territory, and with her own officers, entering into foreign countries, brings us in physical contact with those countries, insuring our exports in reaching their destination."

Mr. S. A. Upson, of Cleveland, president of the Upson Nut and Bolt Company:

"I want to call your attention very briefly to the fact that a few years since we saw the necessity of increasing our export business, and I concluded that I would take some observations in South America. I found on investigation that in order to get there in any comfort and within a reasonable time I must go by way of England. I found in sailing from New York or from any other Atlantic port to the west coast of America, and from San Francisco there is only one line of steamers coasting as far as Panama, but none south of Panama. It seems to me that there should be a line of steamships from Pacific coast ports to the west coast of South America, and that there should be steamers sailing oftener than at present from New York and other Atlantic ports to the east coast of South America.

"It appears to me that there would be considerable advantage in having a large American merchant marine by reason of the fact that at present most of the vessels sailing from our ports are owned by foreign capital, and these foreign owners are interested in lines to the same ports from Europe. Consequently they will make no rates from United States ports lower than those that apply from European ports.

"If we could have a marine of our own it would be cut away from all foreign entanglements, and our steamship agents would be in a position to make a rate to help the home manufacturer as against the foreign manufacturer. Competition is very keen in all manufactured articles I presume. It is the case in ours, and especially in shipments from England and Germany. We should have a marine of our own that would pay no attention to the rates which are promulgated from the other side, but just go on and enable us to meet competition in the delivery price at destination. I think that point should be borne in mind, gentlemen.

"Representative Minor. You think if we had ships running direct from a few ports in the United States to those ports in South America we would get better dispatch and more regular service?

"Mr. Harlowe. Yes, sir; and we would be building up a trade as well as taking care of it. Also please bear in mind that there should be service from the Pacific coast to the west coast of South America."

Hon. John Barrett, now minister to Panama, formerly minister to Argentina (at Chicago, June 24, 1904):

"The business men of Buenos Ayres can write to Europe and receive a reply easily in fifty days. It is very seldom that they can ever communicate with New York and Chicago and get an answer in less than eighty days. Anyone who is familiar with business methods and the importance of good mail exchange realizes what a handicap this is to the extension of American commerce. I have heard scores of South American merchants and bankers complain of the wretched mail arrangements between the United States and Argentina. If there were direct and regular service between Buenos Ayres and New York, there is no doubt in my mind that four-fifths of the southern South Americans who travel to the Northern Hemisphere, on either business or pleasure, would come or return via the United States.

"The principal reason that we do not have direct steamship communication now of the class which I mention is that no company is willing to undertake it as an experiment or venture unless they can receive a compensation for carrying the mail which will insure them against primary or temporary loss. I have talked with leading steamship men in Buenos Ayres, Faris, Hamburg, and London, as well as in New York, and they have all told me that it would be impossible to initiate a great and important undertaking of this kind unless they could receive sufficient support from the United States and the South American republics to protect them while they were building up sufficient traffic and travel to maintain the line on a paying basis."

APPROVED BY ILLINOIS MANUFACTURERS.

Reading these declarations of Middle Western men of business that national aid to the American merchant marine is demanded in order that the manufacturers and farmers of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, and other Middle Western States may secure fair freight rates and adequate shipping facilities to build up their export trade to South America and other foreign markets, it is easy to understand why the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, on April 13, 1906, through its board of directors, formally indorsed the shipping bill of the Merchant Marine Commission and urged the House of Representatives to pass it. The members of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association desire the enactment of this legislation, not as shipowners or shipbuilders, but as American producers, having a surplus which they must sell abroad in competition with the manufacturers of foreign countries whose governments, by subsidy or otherwise, provide ample shipping facilities for them.

STATEMENTS OF AMERICAN REPRESENTATIVES ABROAD.

The declaration of these middle western business men that the failure of our Government to protect and encourage American shipping prevents the manufacturers of the Middle Western States from securing their fair share of the world's markets have been confirmed time and time again by American ministers, consuls, and special commercial agents in foreign countries. About a year ago Special Agent Hutchinson, sent out by the Department of Commerce and Labor, stated in a report, after a brief stay in Brazil, that he did not think that more commercial shipping lines were necessary to South America, though he did think that there was urgent need of an improved mail service. This early report of Mr. Hutchinson, based on brief observation and experience, was eagerly caught up and exploited by those opposed to national aid to the American merchant marine in this country and in Europe. But it is very significant that the farther Mr. Hutchinson traveled in South America and the more he saw and learned the more completely he has come into accord with the opinions of other official observers. In his later reports, based on a fuller understanding of the question, he very frankly declares that our American export trade to South America is seriously hampered by the lack of an American merchant marine and of direct lines of communication.

"Thus Mr. Hutchinson states in a report published on March 23, 1906.

Thus Mr. Hutchinson states, in a report published on March 23, 1906, by the Department of Commerce and Labor:

"There is no direct passenger service to Chile or the River Plata from the United States. Passengers from New York, for example, wishing to get to Buenos Ayres, must either take passage to Rio de Janeiro and there transship to one of the European lines touching at that port en route to the south, or they must cross the Atlantic and transship in some European port to a steamer sailing to Buenos Ayres. If they wish to get to Chile they may go via the Isthmus of Panama, suffering the inconvenience of transfer to the Panama Raliroad and to one of the west coast steamship lines, or they may go to Rio de Janeiro or Montevideo and there transship to a steamer of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company's line running through the Straits of Valparaiso, or they may go to Liverpool or Hamburg and there take steamer direct to Valparaiso. The passenger from Europe, on the other hand, wishing to go to the River Plata, has the choice of half a dozen first-class lines and several inferior ones. If his destination is Valparaiso he has at least two direct lines."

This has come about from the liberal policy of European governments, which, by subsidy or state aid in other form, have provided excellent mail and shipping facilities for their manufactures and merchants.

OUR WRETCHED MAIL SERVICE.

OUR WRETCHED MAIL SERVICE.

Special Agent Hutchinson adds:

"As in Brazil, so in Chile and the River Plata, there is universal complaint that the mail service to and from the United States is inadequate. If the trouble were only in the length of time required for the delivery of malls, the inconvenience would be sufficiently great, but far more serious is the irregularity, infrequency, and uncertainty of the service."

Speaking of South America in general and of the methods of the foreign steamship companies, Mr. Hutchinson says:

"There is abundant reason for believing that this granting of special rates' in actual practice reduces the European rates on many important classes of goods to below the American rates, and that the general impression that our freight charges are somewhat higher than the European is justified. Just what the extent of this excess is it is impossible to say, but the more conservative business men of Valparaiso, for example, place it at about 25 per cent."

Summing up his observations in South America, Special Agent Hutchinson declares:

"The passenger service from the United States is greatly inferior in all respects to that from Europe, and the American people have little inducement to visit and get personally acquainted with commercial and industrial conditions existing in these South American countries. This will remain true until direct lines of first-class passenger steamers ply between New York and the River Plata and a quicker and better service is inaugurated on the west coast from Panama southward to Valparaiso."

As to the American mail service on both the east and west coasts, Mr Hutchinson says that it is "extremely unsatisfactory."

As to the American mail service on both the east and the River Plata are inferior to those from Europe, both as regards frequency, regularity, and time required for delivery, and as to rates."

And he concludes:

"Improvement in the interest of new connections, especially in Chile, would be effected by the establishment of a new line d

AMERICAN SHIPS ALMOST UNKNOWN.

AMERICAN SHIPS ALMOST UNKNOWN.

Our pitiable share of the shipping trade of the most important country on the west coast of South America is thus stated in the Daily Consular and Trade Reports for February 10, 1906, by Consul Mansfield, at Valparaiso:

"In the total number of ships entering and clearing at the several ports of Chile flying the Chilean flag numbered 5,684, of which 5,041 were steamers and 643 sailing vessels. Of the foreign nations, Great Britain represented nearly one-half the total tonnage, with 8,422,000 tons. Germany was second, with 3,000,000 tons. American shipping interests were represented by 33 steamers and 6 sailing vessels, with a tonnage of 131,879 and 3,728 tons, respectively. The total tonnage of all vessels entered was 17,700,000 tons; of the vessels cleared, 17,320."

What is true of Chile is also true of Ecuador. Hon. Archibald J. Sampson, American minister to Quito, states:

"I was informed recently by a prominent merchant here that he would like to deal with New York, but that the freight rates from that city on some of his purchases were fivefold greater when received at Guayaquil than like freight from Hamburg, which was a practical prohibition on American trade."

Germany has steamship lines under her own flag encircling South America. The United States has none at all.

HOW A FOREIGN STEAMSHIP TRUST DOMINATES OUR SOUTH AMERICAN COMMERCE.

How a foreign steamship and only fourteen American sail vessels took cargoes from our whole Atlantic coast for Brazil and Argentina in the first six months of 1906.

So far as steamships are concerned, this important American trade is now, and for several years has been, monopolized by a foreign shipping trust or combination, whose weapons are rebates, discriminations, and boycotting, and whose policies are dictated from Liverpool and Hamburg.

Consul-General Seeger, at Rio de Janeiro, spoke thus of this foreign steamship combination in a report in 1903:

"The united steamship companies which control the carrying trade between the United States and Brazil—the Lamport & Holt Line, the Prince Line, the Robert M. Sloman Line, and the Chargeurs Reunis—have agreed to raise their rates on coffee from Santos and Rio de Janeiro from 30 cents and 5 per cent primage per bag of 133 pounds to 35 cents and 5 per cent. This rate will go into force in October, but as the cargoes for the steamships Byron, Catania, Bellarden, and Soldier Prince have aiready been in large part purchased, these steamers, leaving in the early part of October, have been excepted from this tariff and will carry their cargoes at the old rate."

Before this, in an earlier report, the consul-general had stated:

"Since last August the freights have been raised and lowered and lowered and raised again to suit the purposes of the trust till they have reached their present level. * * The trust has an agreement with coffee shippers here to pay them a rebate of 5 per cent at the end of every six months from the date of the agreement on all freights collected; provided, however, that this rebate is forfeited in case the shippers give freight to any vessel not belonging to the trust outring the period stipulated. Through this arrangement the trust controls the shippers, and American vessels go home in ballast."

A writer and traveler, Julian Haugwitz, in American Trade, has thus described the situation:

"Our commerce with Brazil and the river Plata countries freight levied on American cargo are nearly double those charged by the speedy, modern, elegant ships plying between Europe and the east coast of South America. Not a case of kerosene or a bag of coffee can escape paying toll to this freight ring, and there was more truth than comedy in the facetious request sent by a Rio shipper to the syndicate's agents at that port asking for a permit to ship some coffee on an outside vessel over their ocean. Numerous tramps or outsiders have been willing in Brazilian ports to take coffee to New York for 20 cents a bag, instead of 40 cents, as now exacted. But whenever such a vessel has been placed on the berth the syndicate has promptly lowered its freight to 10 cents, besides boycotting the shippers patronizing the intruder."

A POLICY OF EXCLUSION.

A POLICY OF EXCLUSION.

a vessel mas peen placed on the bestlets boycotting the shippers patronizing the intruder."

A POLICY OF EXCLUSION.

"Another way by which the syndicate tightens its grip on its victims is to offer them a graduated return on the freights paid at the end of the year, provided no case of infidelity has occurred. An example illustrative of the combine's methods of persuasion and the shippers' liberty of trade happened last fall when a large coffee firm in Santos received an order for 20,000 bags of coffee from New York. The syndicate's freight charge was 40 cents a bag plus 5 per cent, but several outsiders were anxious to carry this cargo at 20 cents, which meant a saving of $4,000 to the exporter on this lot alone, and in the same proportion an economy of $1,000,000 to American coffee drinkers on the 5,000,000 bags imported from Brazil last crop year. The firm in question, having the freight room on hand at 20 cents, asked the syndicate to take the coffee at the same rate, and on the latter's refusal advanced its offer to 30 cents. The combine insisted on its full pound of flesh, and when the exporter accepted the tramp's charter the former dropped its rates to 15 cents and later to 10 cents for all other shippers, debarring this firm and one or two other strikers from shipping on the combined boats except at the full oid rates.

"The enormous advantages enjoyed by their less independent competitors, thanks to the combine's bounty, and worth thousands of dollars a day in a business worked on close margins and daily cable offers, soon brought the insurgents to terms, capitulation followed, and the former rates were restored. One overconscientious agent at Santos demurred to boycotting his neighbor, and his scruples cost him the loss of the Sloman Line agency."

A New York merchant, familiar with the Brazillan trade, wrote thus on August 19, 1905, in the New York Journal of Commerce:

"I be leave to call your attention to the very important fact, evidently overlooked by Special Agent Hutchinson and Consul Furniss, country and Brazil."

Consul Furniss, at Bahia, alluded to above, said in his annual report for 1904:

"I have to reiterate my oft-repeated report of the need for an American steamship line. The mall service between the United States and this section of Brazil during the year just past has become much worse than heretofore, due to the withdrawal of one or two monthly boats. As a result of the cargo offering here for the United States and the frequent call of vessels to get it, coupled with the fact that Brazil requires all steamers to take mail, there have been frequent calls of vessels to get it, coupled with the fact that Brazil requires all steamers to take mail, there have been frequent calls of vessels to get mails from here, but there is only one regular boat bringing mails from New York. Between times letters are sent hither from New York by various roundabout ways. This has virtually paralyzed the mail service. For this reason it is frequently the case that mail sent from New York in the middle of a month arrives here days after the mail leaving New York on the first of the ensuing month. This causes great prejudice to business, as the mails arriving last often have bills of lading and custom-house documents for goods arriving by the prior steamer, necessitating extra expense, vexatious delays, and great trouble to withdraw from the custom-house here, which seriously hurts our trade. "It is impossible to maintain trade without frequent and rapid mail service. With the lack of this to contend with and the high freight charges out of New York, it is not to be wondered at that year by year our trade with this section is growing less, while the balance of trade in favor of Brazil is increasing. The present lines from 'New York seem to prefer high freight and little business, and make up by sending their vessels on a triangular course, viz, from Brazil to the United States from the United States to Europe, and then from Europe, with European goods, to Brazil, with only a few vessels going and coming between crease in its fleet the outlook for Germans is even brighter than herefore.

"The manner in which the trade interests of the United States are made to suffer by reason of the inadequacy of the transportation service between this country and South American ports is nothing short of a crime, which must be laid at the doors of Congress, Religiously protecting our interests in every other way, fostering and encouraging our manufacturers and developing home industries for domestic consumption, it makes no provisions for markets for surplus products, and thus payes the way for future industrial stagnation. In the meantime other countries reap the benefits of the trade demands of these nations by establishing steamship lines and commercial agencies in every important city. Is it any wonder that Mr. Lincoln Hutchinson, who is now in Brazil, making a study of the conditions there, exclaims: 'The mass of the people scarcely know that such a country as the United States exists!'"

In 1904 Hon. John Barrett, then minister to Argentina, said in an address on our South American trade before the Merchant Marine Cominow in Brazil, making a study of the conditions there, exclaims: "The mass of the people scarcely know that such a country as the United States coals and the people scarcely know that such a country as the United States coals on the people scarcely know that such a country as the United States on our South American trade before the Merchant Marine Commission:

"I wish to explain a little in regard to this point. The question arises, if the business is there, why do not men go into it? Let most offer the people of the people of

Mr. SHERLEY. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I should like to have him tell the committee, if he can, how much of the trans-Atlantic mail was carried by the American subsidized lines, how much by lines not subsidized, and how much it cost the United States Government for the carrying of the mail on the subsidized lines, and how much it cost for the carrying of it on the unsubsidized lines.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will say to the gentleman that I have a statement which I will put in at this point in my speech, showing the profits to the Government of the United States on carrying the mails as against all the subsidy that we are paying everywhere.

PROFITS OF UNITED STATES OCEAN MAILS.

The report of the Superintendent of Foreign Mails shows the following profits for recent years on our ocean mails:

Secretary Root in his speech November 20, 1906, to the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress at Kansas City, said:

Mississippi Commercial Congress at Kansas City, said:

The actual cost to the Government last year of the ocean mail service to foreign countries other than Canada and Mexico, was $2,965,624.21, while the proceeds realized by the Government from postage between the United States and foreign countries other than Canada and Mexico was $6,008.807.53, leaving the profit to the United States of $3,043.183.32; that is to say, under existing law the Government of the United States, having assumed the monopoly of carrying the mails for the people of the country, is making a profit of $3,000.000 per annum by rendering cheap and inefficient service. Every dollar of that three million is made at the expense of the commerce of the United States. What can be plainer than that the Government ought to expend at least the profits that it gets from the ocean mail service in making the ocean mail service efficient?

Mr. SHFRLEY. Wall the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, the gentleman— Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, I have answered the gentleman's statement, and he must not take up our time.

Mr. SHERLEY. If that is a fair answer, I have nothing fur-

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I will ask the gentleman from Ohio whether any of the lines carrying our mails are unsubsidized, either by our own Government or by some other govern-

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly not. They are all subsidized by some government.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Then what becomes of the question of the gentleman from Kentucky as to how much of the mail is carried on subsidized lines and how much on lines not subsidized?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It was one of those misfortunes that we sometimes fall into of not understanding exactly the force of the question we put.

Mr. SHERLEY. I appreciate very much the gratuitous compliment of the gentleman from Ohio, but I should appreciate it very much more—and I am sure the committee would—if, instead of abuse, he would answer the question put to him.

Will the gentleman state that question Mr. GROSVENOR.

over again?

Mr. SHERLEY. I asked the gentleman if he could tell the committee how much of the European mail was carried on the American subsidized lines, how much on the lines not subsidized by America

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. The gentleman is varying his question.

Mr. SHERLEY. How much the carrying of the mail on subsidized lines cost and how much on the unsubsidized.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will give the gentleman the figures. What he asks has nothing more to do with the question than has a plat of the lots in the New Jerusalem. The gentleman has put a question and I have answered it, and he must not consume time in this sort of a way. It is a palpable effort to consume time against this side. That is perfectly plain to everybody. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have already yielded to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] forty-five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Lit-

TAUER] is recognized for forty-five minutes.

LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, the deplorable decay and humiliating condition of our ocean merchant marine, which in the day of its glory fifty years ago ruled the seas, but which to-day is practically driven from the ocean, has engaged the attention during the last decade of interested and patriotic men both in and out of Congress.

Many measures proposing to rehabilitate this important service have failed of enactment. Early in the first session of this Congress, carrying out in greater part the recommendations of the Merchant Marine Commission established by Congress in 1904, an act was passed by the Senate whose title read, "to promote the national defense, to create a naval reserve, to establish American ocean mail lines to foreign markets, and to promote commerce." That act, for which the measure now before you is a substitute, had three main provisions.

First, It provided for a general ship subsidy, a cargo subsidy to ships engaged in carrying freight over the ocean, and to ships engaged in deep-sea fisheries—a subsidy based upon tonnage, which by some was thought to be a bonus to the ships in these trades

Second. It provided for the establishment of eleven specified mail routes to foreign countries, but did not take advantage of our recent experience, for it provided for those routes at a slow rate of speed and with a low compensation.

Third. It sought to create a naval reserve under definite pro-

No subject has received more generally favorable assent than the necessity for the upbuilding of our merchant marine which, in 1855, carried over 75 per cent of our commerce and in 1905 carried 12 per cent. The withdrawal of mail subsidies by our Government in 1858 at the critical time in the change in ocean vessels from wooden sail ships to steam-propelled iron and steel ships, and the continued increasing subsidies at this time of foreign governments, especially Great Britain, were the main causes of this result.

I take it for granted that no man within the sound of my voice would deny the desirability to the interests of the United States to build up our ocean merchant marine at least so it might be on a par with the other industries of our country. Our national platforms have time and again favored the enacting of legislation which would build up this lost trade.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes.
Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York when the Republican party in a national platform ever declared in favor of a ship subsidy to build up the merchant marine:

Mr. LITTAUER. I am speaking of a mail subsidy in its relating to building up the merchant marine. I do not care to be interrupted at this time. I am making a general statement now, and if the gentleman will reserve his particular questions until a later time I shall be pleased to answer him.

Mr. SULZER. I want to say to the gentleman that no Republican national platform ever advocated ship subsidies.

Mr. LITTAUER. Our national platforms have repeatedly demanded that Congress should pass measures to rehabilitate this loss of trade. Our Presidents have in messages called the attention of Congress to the desirability of rehabilitating our merchant marine not only from the standpoint of material profit, but from its broader bearings on our political relations with foreign nations and from its particular bearing upon our military strength at sea.

The Senate bill, in long consideration before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, seemed impossible of favorable report. There was early disclosed a decided opposition to a cargo subsidy, both from the standpoint of utility as well as propriety. Many amendments and limitations to the Senate measure were offered, including tonnage taxes and discriminating duties impossible of enactment without the abrogation of over thirty treaties with foreign countries. Discriminating duties, moreover, have in modern times been proved unsatisfactory, notably in the case of France, and have been dropped wherever enacted by other nations. And yet there were two projects in the Senate bill which seemed to meet with approval of the committee, as well as of Congress in general. They were projects for the expansion of our mail service and the creation of a naval reserve.

But even on these two subjects much objection was heard and strenuous antagonism raised to some of the conditions in the Senate bill. It was my part, after a careful study of the problem, to suggest the measure that is now before you for consideration, the salient features of which are, first and foremost, the entire and utter elimination of any and every subsidy to ships based on cargo carried. There is not a single provision in this bill that appropriates a dollar for a general-cargo sub-Second, the selection of such mail-carrying routes as would appear to be immediately desirable for the interests of the United States in establishing both commercial and political relations where our present status is a weak one, but where our possibilities are the very strongest. In doing this we take heed of the experience had under existing law, under the mailsubsidy act of 1891, by providing ample and proper compensa-tion that would make it possible to carry out the purposes for which this bill is proposed; in which regard the act of 1891 has in part signally failed.

What is now proposed is to take up the well-established national policy of mail subsidy where it has proved inadequate and to make provision such as would surely accomplish the purpose of rapid mail communication with South America, Australia, and the Orient, in ships of 16 knots speed, faster and superior to those of competing nations now running to those countries; the ships to be built in the United States on designs to be approved by the Navy Department, with a view to their use as naval scouts, auxiliary cruisers, and transports, to be held at the disposal of the Government in time of war, which will carry an increased proportion of American citizens in their crews and a number of American boys as cadets.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that Admiral Dewey, in the report made to the House and Senate relative to the speed of vessels adaptable for scout purposes, said that the speed should be at least 20 knots?

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes; and how does that affect my statement, if you please?

The gentleman just made the statement SHERLEY. that he was providing for ships that would be suitable for scout

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes. No doubt ships of 20 or 24 or even 26 knots would be better than those of 16 knots. Nevertheless, a ship running 16 knots is available as a scout, if not a perfect Again, if not available for scout purposes, 16-knot ships are faster than are generally run to the countries with which we seek to establish mail communication, and as such will be more available, because of their rapidity, as well as for transports and general naval auxiliaries. Sixteen knots is the minimum speed provided in the measure. I understand there is to be an amendment offered here that will authorize the Postmaster-General to accept the bid of the shipowner who will propose to cover the routes in the most rapid fashion; at any rate, we try to establish a 16-knot basis.

We retain the Senate provision for the creation of the naval reserve, specify compensation subject to annual Congressional appropriation, but we have eliminated from the Senate proposition all those provisions which seem to point toward compulsion or impressment or conscription of seamen, which the sailors' unions and labor unions complained against so generally.

The bill as it is to-day before you for consideration is, as I again repeat, in no way a ship-subsidy bill. It has not a single give a dollar to cargo-carrying vessels. It is an ocean mail bill pure and simple, a virtual extension of existing law, with the incidental provision for the establishment of a naval reserve to be voluntary with every officer and seaman, whether he be employed in the coastwise, lake, or foreign service, while it is optional with the owners of the American ships to carry naval-reserve men or not or in any proportion that they may see fit. The bill proposes an expenditure of public money not as a bonus or gift, but as compensation for specified public service, the transportation of American ocean mails by American ocean steamships and the establishment of a superior ocean mail service to those countries of the world where it is conceded our present service is inferior, and where political and com-mercial considerations plainly suggest it should be the best. It is not a measure to benefit existing lines or prosperous corporations.

It provides for seven lines of mail communication, each ene of which is warranted by the expenditure proposed in order to produce the results desired, for, of course, inadequate appropriation would prove as ineffective as the act of 1891 proved to these countries, bringing no results. It is in no way any change in the policy of our country, a policy steadily pursued from 1858, reenacted in the postal-subsidy act of 1891 under a Republican Administration, which enactment was a policy not changed in a single condition when the control of our Federal legislative and executive departments followed into the hands of the Democratic party under Cleveland, so that above all we have a right to appeal to both sides of the House that this measure should receive consideration on the merits of each one of its projects, the general policy having been upheld by the Democratic as well as the Republican party when each was in full control of the Government. We are to-day paying $1,400,000 for the carrying of our mails over six routes to Europe, the West Indies, Mexico, Venezuela, and Australasia. The vessels which carry these mails are the most modern and efficient in our ocean fleet of to-day; in fact, they constitute a large part of our steam tonnage regularly engaged in foreign trade.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Yes.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Does it occur to the gentleman that if they had brought in a bill lowering the duties upon South American products, and at the same time providing a mail subsidy for ships to South America, that then you would have a comprehensive scheme of legislation which the gentlemen upon the Democratic side would be glad to support?

Mr. LITTAUER. My belief is that if we had free trade with South America our commerce would not for the time being be much increased at all.

We import about $75,000,000 from Brazil, largely coffee and rubber. Now, as to Argentina, where our trade affects the leather interests of the country-the shoemaking interest of Massachusetts-we find that 80 per cent of all the hides produced in Argentina come now to the United States under duty. Eighty per cent of all the hides produced in Argentina reaches us, so that all we could increase our trade in hides would be but 20 per cent.

Mr. SULLIVAN. The gentleman leaves out one element, and that is that if we got these hides free from duty we could manufacture our shoes cheaper and sell more shoes to European and Asiatic countries than we do now.

Mr. LITTAUER. We might manufacture a pair of shoes 2 cents, perhaps 3 cents, a pair cheaper. No figures have ever been presented to me showing any more, and I have been brought up not in the shoe business, but in the leather business. I do not believe that the duty on hides makes the cost or has ever made the cost of a pair of shoes 2 cents higher than if the duty was entirely removed from hides.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I want to inform the gentleman that 3 cents in the price of a pair of shoes at wholesale is such an element as to make the difference between success and failure between persons on both sides of the line-that is to say, the man who is manufacturing at 3 cents higher than the other loses out on account of that small item.

Mr. LITTAUER. 1 can not agree at all with the statement. and I do not believe it would make a difference in the exports of a hundred pair of shoes in a year, and I think I have as much right to my statement as the gentleman from Massachusetts has to his.

There is no experiment of any kind connected with this bill. It is founded on a partially successful experience of our own and follows in the exact lines of the eminently successful ex-perience of Great Britain for over sixty years, of Germany, and of France, and of Italy, and most emphatically in late years of Japan. Great Britain was the pioneer in this policy of mail subsidy, on which she has expended $300,000,000. stated object was rapid, frequent, and punctual communication to feed the main arteries of her commerce, to foster maritime enterprise, and to encourage the building of superior vessels, which would promote wealth in time of peace and be a defense in time of war.

Mr. MARTIN. If the gentleman will permit, if I understand this bill and report, it is a bill for purely a mail subsidy.

Mr. LITTAUER. Purely so.
Mr. MARTIN. Take for example the first proposed route provided in this bill between American ports and Brazil. In what manner is the American mail to Brazil now being carried under our postal service?

Mr. LITTAUER. I will say via Liverpool and Europe to great extent. To-day we have not a single regular and reliable mail connection with Brazil or that coast of South America. We send occasionally mails on some slow ship, neither regular in sailing nor rapid nor punctual, but often the regular way of sending our mail to-day is via Liverpool and Havre.

Mr. MARTIN. I notice that the provision requiring a subsidized mail route to Brazil provides no limit of compensation for a monthly service, and-

Mr. LITTAUER. If the gentleman will excuse me, I will reach that later, because I wish to take up each route and dis-

Mr. MARTIN. I desire to question the gentleman when he reaches that point.

Mr. LITTAUER. Incidental to the main purpose of mail communication arise interests of the utmost moment to this country in the conditions existing to-day. To carry out the provisions submitted to you will promote the steel-ship building industry, will promote the maintenance of shipyards with skilled workmen, an industry as much a part of the national defense in its ability to build war vessels as is the building up of the Without shipyards we can have no ships, and without ships we can have no naval reserve, again as essential to the Navy as the National Guard of our States is in relation to the Army. Materials for the building of ships in the foreign service are by the Dingley Act free of duty, but bear in mind that in the cost of a ship labor plays an altogether greater part than materials, for we are clearly advised that 60 per cent of the total cost of a vessel is for labor in assembling the materials at the shipyard, while of the balance of 40 per cent, 30 per cent is in the labor expended in making the materials ready for their purposes. It is the high rate of American wages that makes shipbuilding 30 per cent dearer in the United States than in England, while the cost of the raw materials plays but a very small part, indeed, in the calculation.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman at that point permit me? Is it not also true that no ship built of foreign material upon which duty has not been paid can be used in the coastwise trade for a longer period than two months in any one year?

Mr. LITTAUER. Why, certainly; as I said a moment ago, these ships have to ply across the ocean.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not also true that no shipowner is willing to take advantage of that provision when it prevents his ship from being put into the coastwise trade, should circumstances make it necessary?

Mr. LITTAUER. I do not think so. Mr. SHERLEY. That is the statement of Mr. Arthur Sewall, who practically tried it.

Mr. LITTAUER. I would not second it. Now, coming back to the materials.

Mr. FOSS. May I ask the gentleman a question? I want to ask the gentleman whether or not he has any opinion from the Navy Department as to the provisions in this bill relating to the Naval Reserve feature?

Mr. LITTAUER. We have had a great number of letters recommending them all-practically recommending the provisions of the Senate bill. We have eliminated, in connection with the Naval Reserve, all the provisions that look toward compulsion. To-day the compensation is specified, the conditions are specified; but we make it voluntary for any sailor or officer engaged in the lake, coastwise, or foreign service to join the Naval Reserve, if he come within the requirements, and to accept these emoluments, as he may choose. Then we make it entirely voluntary on the shipowner to have in his crews a large or a small percentage or number of sailors belonging to the reserve, as he may choose.

Mr. FOSS. May I ask the gentleman whether there were ever any hearings before the committee on this particular substitute relating to the Naval Reserve?

Mr. LITTAUER. No; there were none. It is practically the same measure that has been thoroughly discussed and approved by the Navy, with the elimination of everything that we felt was subject to great criticism, but we wanted to eliminate anything that might look toward compulsion. We had no desire whatever to try to force men into the Naval Reserve. It was to be a voluntary organization, the same as our militia. It is nothing but a fitting school. These men, if they belong to the three marine services-lake, coastwise, and foreign-have a right, provided they are American citizens, to join the reserve under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy will make. They join for four years. They receive, according to their station and their ability as seamen, certain annual retainers, as do the British naval reserves. That compensation has to be provided for each year by Congressional appropriation, but it would appear that under these regulations we might create a naval reserve of perhaps 2,000 men. And if we could, and could train them a week or two each year, the small expense that would be involved in this matter would not be worthy of serious consid-

Now, I was coming to the point in the consideration of the construction of ships that it is really the cost of labor, the rate of American wages, that makes it impossible to build ships here in competition with ships built in foreign countries. are told that ships in our country cost from 20 to 30 per cent more than ships built in foreign yards. Sixty per cent of the gross cost of a ship is labor; and, then, you must remember that most of the materials when they reach the shipyard have been already improved, and labor is here again the greater part It is the high rate of American wages, not the cost of raw materials, that has to do with our inability to compete with foreign nations in the building of ships

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. LITTAUER. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not true that upon the Great Lakes they are building ships cheaper than they are building them anywhere in the world?

Mr. LITTAUER. The kind of ships we build on the Great Lakes are different in many ways. There are great cargo-carrying ships; enormous carrying ships, in a certain way; ships that would not be particularly fitted for ocean traffic, freshwater steamers which in many particulars are cheaper than steamers for salt-water use.

I appreciate that, but they are ships in Mr. SHERLEY. which the labor element is as large as in ships that are fitted for ocean voyages

Mr. LITTAUER. And without any foreign competition at

They must be built in American yards.

The policy of every great maritime power of Europe is to induce the building of its mail steamships as well as its war vessels in its own shipyards. The ships which will be built in the United States, if this bill is to be carried into effect, will result in an additional fleet of from twenty-seven to thirty fast steel merchant steamers, made suitable, in accordance with the provisions of the bill, for auxiliary purposes in times of war, pre-cisely similar to the way similar fleets are called into existence, and supported in precisely the same manner to aid the navies of England, France, Germany, Russia, Italy, Spain, and Japan. Germany follows the "free-ship" policy as to ordinary steamers, permitting her citizens to acquire ships where they will; but Germany stipulates that the steamships of her subsidized mail lines must be built in German shipyards and as far as possible of German materials. The "free-ship" argument has no basis, on precedent of other countries, in connection with subsidized mail lines. There are on the seas, in foreign trade, 196 ships of 16-knots speed. Of 19 no definite information could be had, but 150 of the 196 receive subsidies, while but 27 receive no subsidy.

Of the seven projects of this bill, four apply to the countries south of us in the American Continent, with whom we have a vital political and commercial interest, and three to the Orient. The Monroe doctrine impels us, in the furtherance of its highest purpose, to cultivate relations of political and commercial intimacy with the governments of Central and South America.

Within ten years we have acquired in the Pacific Ocean the Hawaiian Archipelago, the Philippine Archipelago, a portion of the Samoan group, and the island of Guam. We have under-taken to construct at enormous cost the Panama Canal. All of which acquisitions and undertakings carry with them opportunities in the expansion of our trade in South America and in It is in these two directions that this bill seeks to take advantage of our commercial opportunities. The very first step, if we desire new foreign markets, must be rapid mail communication, providing amply, at the same time, conveniences that will enable the buyers and sellers of these countries to come to us rapidly and easily, as well as to permit ours to go to them.

Mail communication with regularity and rapidity of service are primary and imperative needs of commerce, just as commerce is the best promoter of international friendship. The better mail facilities provided, the greater in experience has been the expansion of national trade. Experience has therefore compelled nations, without regard to expense, to foster and promote progress in their foreign postal service. regularity are the essential requirements. Every merchant recognizes that the approaches to a market must be quick and convenient and regular; hence the imperative demand for fast and frequent mail and passenger steamers on all the ocean highways of the world. All nations are seeking to transport their mails under their own flag. No agents are equal to steamships in inducing a foreign demand for the products of a country.

The ocean mail service of the United States has proved to be a source of great profit. The superintendent of foreign mails calls attention to the fact that in the fiscal year 1906 the cost of ocean mail service was $2,965,624.21, while the postage collected on articles exchanged with foreign countries, leaving out Canada and Mexico, amounted to $6,008,807.53, leaving a net profit of $3,043,183.32-a profit of $3,000,000 which it would appear could well be spent in the development of our ocean mail service, as is proposed in this bill, and in making such ocean

Every dollar of these $3,000,000 is made at the expense of the commerce of the United States. The profit to-day, or rather during the year 1906, was $3,000,000, but this profit, as the figures show, has been a progressive one. During the last four years, from 1903 to 1906, inclusive, it has averaged $2,567,830.45 per year, while in the four preceding years, from 1899 to 1902, inclusive, the profit amounted to but $1,240,706.26 each year. While no doubt this increase of 100 per cent in profit arising from the carriage of ocean mails during the last four years, in comparison with the previous four years, may, in part, arise from the wonderful expansion of trade in exports and imports during this period, it would seem that we would have a right to infer that this increase of profit would continue in almost like proportion, and especially so if we expend these profits in the development of the trade which makes them an incident. will take at least four years to build the ships required to take advantage of the provisions of this act. If the same ratio of increase in the profits of our mail service continues, we will at that time be making a profit of $5,000,000 out of the oceanmail service, while this bill calls for an extreme expenditure, if every opportunity it offers is taken advantage of, of $3,850,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman tell how much was charged to the expenses of operating the mail service, for the operating cost of the post-office system of America?

Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman repeat that question, as I did not hear the last of it?

Mr. SHERLEY. Why, the proposition is simply this: How much have you charged against the receipts from the foreign mail service to the cost of operating the postal service in this

Mr. LITTAUER. I have charged whatever the cost actually was. The cost was $2,965,624.21. Now, the profits on that might be the difference between these figures and the income that the United States has had from postage going to foreign countries-postage based upon the weight of packages and letters and other mail carried.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I do not believe he will want that answer to stand. Do you mean to tell the committee that there has been charged against the receipts for the foreign mail service any of the expenses incident to the post-office service in America, other than simply the payment of the steamship companies?

Mr. LITTAUER. The carriage across the seas is the main expense charged, and the Superintendent of Foreign Mails explains particulars.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman consider it fair or anything but a trick of bookkeeping to talk about a balance in favor of the ocean trade of $3,000,000 or more, when he does not charge against that trade any of the expense incident to the Post-Office Department?

Mr. LITTAUER. I can not see by what process of reasoning the gentleman wants to make any addition to the cost of the carriage across the ocean in relation to the postal revenue. We have received it because these mails go to foreign countries. The income figured is separate from the domestic cost. If we had not postal communication with foreign countries we would not have received $6,000,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the gentleman must realize that the cost of carrying the foreign mail, both that which goes out and that which comes in, is not limited simply to crossing the water.

Mr. LITTAUER. True. That is the ocean carriage. Now, then, it is the carriage of a letter that leaves Washington and goes through New York to Liverpool or to London, and the domestic charge, the charge for the railway mail service to New York, is not included.

Mr. SHERLEY. But is not that an expense of the Post-Office Department, and should they not include every expense for the actual carriage of the mail on land as well as on the water?

Mr. LITTAUER. Let us put it on that basis, and let me begin my argument, and my argument is that it cost for the foreign carriage over $6,000,000 last year, and we made out of this carriage across the ocean not less than $3,000,000.

The volume of the ocean mails of the United States is proved to be practically the same as the ocean mails of Great Britain. To carry these mails the United States spends $3,000,000 out of the $6,000,000 she receives for the carriage of same, while Great Britain spends $6,000,000 subsidizing her fleet of high-Great Britain spends $6,000,000 subsidizing her fleet of high-speed ocean steamers to all parts of the world, supporting and training of her naval reserves. We spend $3,000,000 on an inferior mail service, conducted chiefly by foreign steamers. Great Britain spends $6,000,000 on a superb ocean mail fleet, suitable for war purposes, manned by naval reserves, every ship contributing to her naval and commercial power.

Mr. PRINCE. On page 19 of the bill, section 3, you provide for the Naval Reserve, providing for officers, petty officers and men, limiting the number to not to exceed 10,000, and specifying the pay that each shall receive. Have you figured out what would be the average pay of each of these 10,000 men who may be regarded as a part of the Naval Reserve?

Mr. LITTAUER. I have not. And I do not believe we can. It would be simply an estimate that anyone might make, from any standpoint, but without any reasoning from experience, Membership in the Naval Reserve would be entirely voluntary. How do we know whether it is going to be a taking proposition The unions may be against it.

Mr. PRINCE. I am assuming that we are passing a working bill, and that it will go into effect and meet with the approval of the people, and that 10,000 men will be added to the Naval Reserve of the United States.

Mr. LITTAUER. That is the utmost limit that might be added.

Mr. PRINCE. I find here for each officer of the line, referring now to page 20, the highest officer receives $110 a year and the lowest receives $24 a year, so I suppose we may properly make an average of $50 or $60.

Mr. LITTAUER. Oh, no; the seamen far outnumber the officers. The number of officers of high rank to whom $110 per year would be paid would be very few, and if the gentleman will read the section carefully he will see that the payment of these sums is dependent upon annual appropriations by Congress and the submission of estimates. So I take it for granted that after this bill becomes a law a further appropriation will have to be made to cover the expenses of the Naval Reserve, and until such appropriation is made the provision in regard to the reserve can not go into operation.

Mr. PRINCE. We are now proceeding to make a contract which will last for ten years, and we are to pay so much for the transportation of the mails, and we are likely to add 10,000 men to the Naval Reserve by virtue of this, who, in addition to the $3,700,000, are also to be paid out of the Treasury. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state whether you are not helping to pay the seamen who go upon these vessels, and to that extent making an additional gift to the shipowners by reducing the pay that they would have to give to the men by the amount that the Government will pay?

Mr. LITTAUER. I do not believe that result will at all come I do not believe the compensation offered in this bill is going to lead to the establishment of a naval reserve of 10,000 or even of 2,000. The best authorities have told me that the Naval Reserve need not be expected to be any considerable number at any early date. We will gain by experience, and perhaps will be able to amend the law, but in no way will it act as a sort of bonus to shipowners.

Mr. FOWLER. You mean to the shipowners?
Mr. LITTAUER. It will not be a bonus to the shipowners through a gratuity toward the wages of the sailors.

This bill provides for a monthly service over its specified routes at one-half the compensation given for a fortnightly service. The monthly service would give twelve communica-tions a year, and the fortnightly service would give twenty-The subsidy is not increased in proportion, because the number of ships required for a fortnightly service being greater than the number required for a monthly service could be built for less money.

As to the rates of compensation in this bill. I would state that they have been the subject of most careful study, and practically represent 10 per cent on the first cost of ships that will be necessary to conduct the service. This percentage is practically the same as the English Government is giving the Cunard Line for the building of the two enormous steamers now under way to keep her mail service with New York ahead of that of her competitors. She believes that it is so much to the advantage of her trade to lead in this service, already so fully established, that she made a loan of $13,000,000, which she supplements with the guaranty for mail and admiralty subsidy to the company, because of these two steamers in an actual aggregate of $1,210,500 a year for the next twenty years, or a little less than 10 per cent on the loan made.

Mr. STAFFORD. I want to ask the gentleman from New York this question. He was discussing the total expenditure that Great Britain makes for its mail subsidy as compared with that proposed by this bill. Has the gentleman any data comparing the total mileage covered under the Great Britain subsidy with that proposed in this bill?

Mr. LITTAUER. I have not. I do not believe that Great Britain's subsidy is given by mileage, although I do remember that the subsidy from Great Britain to South Africa is based upon substantially the same figures and the same percentage as the subsidy here proposed from the Atlantic coast to Buenos Ayres.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman know whether she pays the same rate of subsidies for all mail service?

Mr. LITTAUER. Oh, no; it depends altogether upon the conditions of trade. She seeks to help where help is needed, and gives much greater subsidies in some directions than she does in others, the same as we do in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the present law the compensation is the same only it varies according to mileage?

Mr. LITTAUER. Mileage and speed alone, but that is not so in the provisions of this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is as far as the speed is concerned.

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes; but when you go to miles it is a different matter. I am going to comment on that very subject.

Now, the subsidies in this bill are based as near as possible on 10 per cent of the first cost of the ships necessary to carry them out.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman allow me a question right there?

Mr. LITTAUER. Certainly.
Mr. SHERLEY. Was there any testimony of any kind before the committee relative to what the cost of the ships would be according to the terms of this bill?

Mr. LITTAUER. The committee did not enter upon that sub-

Mr. SHERLEY. Was there any data before the committee showing what the size of the ships would be under the terms

Mr. LITTAUER. No; nor could there be.

Mr. SHERLEY. Was there any as to the cost of maintaining such a ship or its probable earning capacity, or any other detailed statement by which we could gather how much was necessary in order to give the shipowner a reasonable profit?

Mr. LITTAUER. No; but we do know that if we want to make a service successful, if we want to make up in the shipsubsidy legislation where our failures have been in the past and where lines have not been extended, we know that we have got to follow in the footsteps of other nations that have been successful. Now, the gentleman could ask a thousand questions on that line, but I would like to make my statement, and then I will answer his questions if I can.

[The time of Mr. Littauer having expired, he was yielded fifteen minutes more by the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Grosve-

NOR ]

Mr. LITTAUER. Would it not be well for the United States to pattern after the action of the great maritime nation of Great Britain, 25 per cent only of whose foreign-going steamships are engaged in the carrying trade to and from the United States and in carrying 50 per cent of all that is shipped out of and into the United States over the ocean?

Compare her liberality with the results of our own mail subsidy between New York and Europe, where under the act of 1891 there was paid on our contract last year $762,638, while if we had paid for the weight of the mails carried under this subsidy contract at our regular statutory rate this line would have been entitled to $910,542, so that the Government saved nearly $150,000 on the most decried contract in existence under the mail-subsidy act of 1891. Through the provisions of that act, paying subsidy of $4 per mile to a line already in existence, we last year saved the Government $150,000, and besides that had the steamships of the line available for Government purposes in times of war should there have been a repetition of the necessity for their use as there was in the Spanish war, when without the Yale and Harvard and others of this line we would have had to pay enormous prices for whatever ships we might have had to use as secuts and transports for the Army in that war.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LITTAUER.

Mr. MARTIN. Does the act of 1891, under which the so-called "subsidy contracts" are made, authorize the Postmaster-General to make similar contracts between American ports and South American ports?

Mr. LITTAUER. Anywhere; provided they come up to the conditions; the rate is dependent upon the mileage.

Mr. MARTIN. Why is it that contracts with other countries have not been entered into?

Mr. LITTAUER. Because the rates are inadequate.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The Oceanic Steamship Company is operating a line from San Francisco to Australia under existing law, and has an indebtedness now of-

Mr. LITTAUER. It is losing money every year.

Mr. KAHN. Of over $2,000,000. Its stock is down to about $2 a share and its bonds are down to $60 or $65. It has defaulted in its interest, simply because it has tried to live up to its contract.

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes; and yet its ships are among the most modern built of ships; and if we were to have any trouble in the Pacific, they would be demanded and be most necessary for the purposes of the National Government.

They make 16 knots right along.

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes; 16 knots. They will come in under this bill, and I will explain their status in a moment.

Mr. MARTIN. Approximately, how much of an increase of sibsidy, by any proportion that the gentleman can give us, would this new bill provide for?
Mr. LITTAUER. Double.

As compared with the other. Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes; this new bill provides for 16-knot ships. Under the old law the subsidy is $2, and under this proposed bill it will be at least $4 and over.

The compensation would be about double?

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes; and must necessarily be so. I will explain that when I get to the routes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Was not that the basis of pay that would have been paid if this mail had not been carried by American subsidized routes, the one-sixty rate?

Mr. LITTAUER. It unquestionably was the rate that applied to American ships.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not true that the same mail could have been carried, and other mail was being carried, at 44 cents?

Mr. LITTAUER. By subsidized foreign line ships. Mr. SHERLEY. We are paying only 44 cents. Mr. LITTAUER. We were paying 44 cents to foreign subsidized lines, but under the laws of the land as they stand to-day, had the American Line, like the Pacific Mail, refused to accept the terms of the subsidy it would have received $910,000 for what under the subsidy act it received $752,000. If you want to consider some other set of circumstances, if her ships had belonged to foreigners, and had been subsidized by England, we would have had a different rate for such ships than we have for our own; but under and according to the laws of the land, without any change, if this subsidy contract had not been in existence, that line would have received $150,000 more than it did under the subsidy for carrying the same mails.

Mr. SHERLEY. And if the contract had not been in existence and the mail had been given to a foreign line, the Government would have saved a considerable sum. Is not that true?

Mr. LITTAUER. The Government pays to foreign lines one rate for the carriage of mails. It pays to the American lines another rate. The point of my argument is that this contract has been decried by gentlemen like the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley], but that it has resulted in a profit to the United States.

Mr. SHERLEY. Assuming we would have to carry it at the one-sixty rate.

Mr. LITTAUER. Assuming we would have to do the work as we did it, but the mails were carried by the American Line, and we have made this profit of $150,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the only case where the pay would have been in excess?

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Because of the density of traffic.

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes; and that is the only case where the Government pays $4 a mile, because it is the only line in which we have 20-knots ships.

Mr. MARTIN. I want to ask the gentleman another question. It seems to me that the gentleman is right now upon the point I was seeking to get some information upon before, and that is this: What, approximately, is the cost of the present service we are now obtaining, the present mail service, say, to Brazil, for example?

Mr. LITTAUER. Oh, that I do not recall; but it is all set forth in the report of the superintendent of foreign mails.

Mr. MARTIN. How does that compare with the cost of the service that is proposed under this new legislation?

Mr. LITTAUER. Oh, I could not give you that figure. I do not know how our mails go. Our mails go in part in one way and in part in another. They are sent to Europe, and if the steamers go from Liverpool at an earlier date to Rio de Janeiro and Buenos Ayres, they are sent from Liverpool; if not, they are dispatched from Havre or from Hamburg.

Mr. MARTIN. We have no mail contracts for carrying them? Mr. LITTAUER. None whatever.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman, before he concludes, tell the committee what has been the history, whether financially successful or not, with the lines that we have sub-sidized heretofore—the Roach and the Collins lines, and the other firms—and what the difference is between the bills they were subsidized under and the present one?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman will find all that in the RECORD in the morning in the extension of my speech.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman is so capable of telling the House everything that it may desire to know that I would like to have it.

Mr. LITTAUER. Now, I want to try to get along and make my few points if I am able to do so. The French Government is acting just like the English Government. The French Government has a contract with the great French line, the Compagnie Générale Transatlantique. It pays that company $1,289,000 of subvention from Havre to New York. That same company runs ships to the West Indies, and that line is subsidized at the rate of $939,524 for carrying mail communication there. This whole bill is based on the experience of nations which have been successful in fostering their commerce, successful in developing their merchant marine, which followed the establishment of subsidized mail lines.

Now, we propose in this bill seven routes. The first one runs from a point on the Atlantic coast to Rio Janeiro. The subsidy proposed is $600,000, which would be for twenty-six departures each year, which would give an average of $23,077 for each voyage and would pay to the line about $4.62 for each mile of Route No. 2, which extends again from a seaport on the Atlantic coast to Montevideo and Buenos Ayres would traverse a journey a thousand miles longer, 6,000 miles. The subsidy for fortnightly service is $800,000, or $33,077 per voyage, $5.01 per mile.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes.

Mr. WILSON. I was going to ask you one question. That is not the information you gave us the day when this bill was reported, and I was going to ask you where you got this information, and where you got the information based on-

Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman state in what regard this is not the same information?

Mr. WILSON. I understand the amount of subsidy per trip and per mile

Mr. LITTAUER. I think the gentleman is mistaken. I think these are the identical figures for fortnightly services I presented before, the ones which I have just stated, but will ask the gentleman to point any figures which are not the same.

Mr. WILSON. In the first you said the amount per trip would be $25,000.

Mr. LITTAUER. My dear sir, if you will kindly divide 26 into $600,000, you get the result that will give you the correct figure I gave, and if you divide 12 into $300,000 you will get $25,000.

Mr. WILSON. I asked where you got the information we did not have before.

I got it by dividing 26 into $600,000, Mr. LITTAUER. $23,071, and then I divided the total amount of the trip by 5,000 miles to get the rate per mile. On the route to Buenos Ayres, $800,000 subsidy, 6,000 miles, the rate is higher than the rate Why? Because our trade with Brazil is but a to Brazil. small one in exports and a large one in imports. Ships will always be able to get a large cargo on a return voyage from Brazil, while our trade with Argentina and Uruguay is a larger one in export, and will probably grow to be still larger in exports than imports.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. LITTAUER. I do. Mr. McNARY. I would like to ask the gentleman, if he has finished upon that particular point-

Mr. LITTAUER, I have not.
Mr. McNARY. I meant on the trade we get—why it is that the committee has reported as regards the Pacific coast ports that the line shall go north of Cape Mendocino-

I am coming to that in a moment. Mr. LITTAUER.

Mr. McNARY. Just a question-and why is it that on the Atlantic coast the provision is that practically all lines go from New York?

Mr. LITTAUER. The gentleman's statement is absolutely incorrect so far as New York is concerned. The Postmaster-General, if this bill should become a law, would ask for bids. Bids might be received from New York, Portland, Boston, Balti-more, or wherever anyone was willing to enter into the conditions of the contract. There is nothing whatever in the bill which requires these lines to start from New York, but it is probable they would, because New York happens to be the great export and import center of the country.

Then, Mr. Chairman, in order to make that Mr. McNARY. point clear, as long as it is provided in the Pacific coast division that a line shall go

Mr. LITTAUER. I will come to that by and by.
Mr. McNARY. Wait a moment. Will the gentleman agree to an amendment for the committee providing a line shall go from certain points, dividing the Atlantic coast up the same as the Pacific coast?

If the gentleman will give me as good a Mr. LITTAUER. reason why it should be done on the Atlantic coast as I can give him why it should be done on the Pacific coast, I will accept the amendment. Mr. McNARY. I think I can,

Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman support the bill if I

Mr. McNARY. With everal other amendments, I will be delighted to do it.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield to me just for a moment?

Mr. LITTAUER. I want to go on. We sell the Argentine $16,000,000 worth of our manufactures, We buy from her to-day only $8,000,000 worth. Her exports are wool, $50,000,000; wheat, $51,000,000; corn, $33,000,000; linseed, $21,000,000; cattle and meat, $14,000,000, none of which can expect to find a market in this country, while, as I said before, of the one product, hides, we are now importing 80 per cent of all she The capital city of the Argentine is Buenos Ayres, produces. with a million people. The foreign trade of the country is $500,000,000, though the population is only 6,000,000—a greater foreign trade than has China, with 300,000,000 people, or Japan, with nearly 40,000,000 people. There will be required to establish the route to Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, fortnightly service, five steamers, and these five steamers will cost about $6,000,000, exactly ten times the subsidy proposed, 10 per cent on the first cost of ships

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have taken a good deal of the gentleman's time, and I am perfectly willing to yield him five minutes to be taken from my time.

Mr. Chairman, let me make a statement. Mr. GROSVENOR. will yield fifteen minutes more to the gentleman from New York, and state, in my opinion, that the gentleman controlling the time on the other side will recommend with myself that debate shall be extended longer than the five hours, so that we can give everybody a better chance to debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] to yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Lit-TAUER] is recognized in the time of the gentleman from Ohio

[Mr. GROSVENOR]

Mr. LITTAUER. Gentlemen. I believe if you will permit me to finish my statement, I will answer a good many of the questions you are bombarding me with from time to time. have finished now with the consideration of the routes on the eastern coast of the United States. I will next proceed with the route on the Pacific. The route is from the west coast of the United States to the west coast of South America, Callao, and Valparaiso, a distance of 6,000 miles, equal in length to the route to Argentina. But the subsidy on the west coast is $600,000, while on the east coast it is $800,000. Why? Because the 16-knot ship that will run over this route will have business at Panama, and that business will aid so materially that the subsidy need not be as great.

Now, to-day the Pacific Mail Steamship Company runs over this route from San Francisco to Panama, but no American ship runs south of Panama. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company over this route has nothing but slow steamers. not use a single steamer that she now possesses with which to establish this mail communication. She would have to build new steamers, just as any others who might care to enter that trade. Not a single American steamship runs to-day, regularly or expeditiously or any other way, from the Atlantic or the Pacific coasts of the United States to the ports specified in these three routes. The Secretary of State, after his notable trip to the east and west coasts of South America, lays particular stress upon the desirability of more intimate trade relations with South America, and he declares that above all the most effective means of promoting such relations is the establishment of improved steamship communication between the continents, for modern commerce demands regularity and rapidity in mail communication, as well as comfortable, regular, and quick passenger transit for those who desire to trade with one another. The Pan-American Congress has at each meeting declared the desirability of better steamship communication between the American countries.

The congress held last August favored definite contracts with mail navigation lines, to connect the principal ports of the American countries, to be established by joint action of the countries affected. Peru voted this year an annual subsidy of $150,000 for fifteen years to improve her steamship communication with the Isthmus of Panama, in order to bring her closer to our Atlantic and European ports. The Chilean budget this year contains an appropriation of $95,000 for substantially the same purpose, while on the east coast the Argentine Republic has under consideration a monthly subsidy of $25,000 for a fast mail line to improve her communication with Europe. Showing conclusively that these countries are ready to cooperate generously in providing a fast mail service.

Now, on the Atlantic coast we have line No. 3, which will run from a port on the Gulf of Mexico to Panama. Here is one exception to the general rule. We provide here for boats of only 14-knot speed. We provide for a weekly boat. leave out the monthly service and provide for a fortnightly or weekly service at an altogether lower rate of compensation, because the business does not require it, and the line can be established without high compensation. The purpose of this line is to permit the commerce of the Mississippi Valley to get into close communication, not only with Panama, where our great expenditure is now taking place, but through Panama to the west coast of South America.

When we turn to the mail subsidies in the Pacific Ocean, wherein this bill proposes to increase the present subsidy of $300,000 by an addition of $1,600,000 in order to establish regular communication with China, Japan, and the Philippines at a total utmost cost of $1,900,000, we find that the British Gov-ernment is paying for her mail lines to these countries, to Asia and Australia, $1,700,000 to the Peninsular and Oriental Steamship Company, and in addition $200,000 to the Canadian Pacific Company, making a total subvention for this service on the Pacific Ocean of $2,000,000. The German Government, for its Facine Geean of $2,000,000. The German Government, for its service to Asia and Australia, pays the North German Lloyd Company 5,590,000 marks, or $1,320,000; the French Government pays the Messageries Maritime Steamship Company, for its service to Asia and Australia, $1,756,870. These foreign lines have been subsidized for many years and are well established, so that in view of the higher cost of construction of our ships as well as of their operation our proposed expenditure of $1,900,000, against expenditures of $2,000,000 by Great Britain and $1,750,000 by France and $1,320,000 by Germany, is not extravagant, but is quite on a par with those foreign subventions. Bear in mind that these routes will give us weekly steamers to Manila, Chinese and Japanese ports as well as to Hawaii, and service at least once in three weeks to Samoa and Australia.

The proposal in route No. 5, running from San Francisco to Hawaii, Japan, China, and the Philippines, is for a fortnightly service, at a compensation of $700,000. This is the nightly service, at a compensation of $700,000. This is the Pacific Mail Steamship route as far as China, which line is run in connection with what is known as the Harriman system of railroads which concentrate at San Francisco as terminal for freights for the Orient, drawn from all that part of the country south, let us say, of New York, Chicago, and Omaha, including the entire south and southwest sections of the United States, as well as the southern part of the Middle West.

The Pacific Mail Steamship line is a necessary adjunct to the great systems of transcontinental railways known as "the Harriman lines," and, no doubt, will continue to run for freight purposes whether mail subsidies are granted or not, but will be run in the future, as it has been in the past, as an adjunct to this railroad system and not particularly to increase the mail facilities with the Orient or to build up ships as an auxiliary to the Navy, or to build up a naval reserve.

This steamship company has been in existence since before the act of 1891 became a law, when her ships were of the slow Then she bid for and obtained a contract under the act of 1891, at the rate of $1 per mile, but abandoned it after a few voyages, in less than two years, as unprofitable, because of the requirements of the law. She has placed since in her service five rapid-running steamships, each one of which would be available for compensation under this bill, just as they are now available at the $2 rate provided by the act of 1891 for such service. At least, during the last five years, if the Pacific Mail Steamship Company had taken advantage of the subsidies now provided by law, she could have received $480,000 per annum, but she has constantly refused to do so.

She was paid for such mails as she transported this past year about $82,000, thus forfeiting the opportunity of obtaining an additional $400,000 simply because she was unwilling to meet the requirements of the postal-subsidy act. Now, in the bill before you we propose to offer a line running over the route that her ships partially run $700,000, but the conditions now imposed are even much greater than the conditions of the old act. The regulations as to the nationality of seamen, payment of same, and the regulations as to the regularity of the same, because of which she refused to take advantage of the subsidy now provided by law. To them we have added that her ships, which but occasionally extend their journeys beyond Hongkong, must on each and every trip continue to the port of Manila, an additional journey of 628 miles each way, or 1,256 miles for the round trip, of great advantage to the United States in quick and regular communication for mail and transportation of merchandise and Army supplies. We offer as an inducement an increase of $220,000 per year over the subsidy which she might have earned under existing law.

I doubt whether this subsidy will ever be taken advantage of by the Pacific Mail, but I believe it is justified from every point of consideration and desirable, even if accepted by the Pacific Mail. Those who raise the old cry and point to this line as "the nigger in the wood pile" have given little study to the experience of the past and the considerations I have briefly alluded to, but simply follow the easiest line of criticism.

If the Pacific Mail, Harriman's lines, should accept the sub-sidy, it would mean the building of at least one and probably two 16-knot ships, together with regular communication between San Francisco and our military garrisons, naval fleets, and markets in the Philippines, and above all the displacement on those five ships already in commission on this line, as well as the new ones that would have to be built, of the Chinese and Japanese sailors, and the engagement in their stead of American sailors at American wages.

I doubt whether the Pacific Mail, because of this addition of less than $300,000, will ever take advantage of the subsidy we Her ships are run in connection with a system of now offer. They do not want regular dates of sailing fixed by the Post-Office Department, as this law would require. want to run whenever their cargo permits them to run; and I believe if they did run under this act, if they did come under its provisions, we would be justified, and that the United States would receive a good return for the proposed subsidy.

Mr. DENBY. I beg the gentleman's pardon for interrupting him, and will be as brief as possible. I should like to ask the gentleman whether he has any comparison showing the cost of maintenance?

Mr. LITTAUER. I will come to that in a moment. If the Pacific Mail should take advantage of this subsidy she will have to build two ships of 16-knot speed and will have to make regular sailings. All their ships will have to come under the regulation as to sailors—that is, one-quarter of the sailors must be American citizens within two years, one-third within three years thereafter, and after five years one-half. What does that mean? That means that as the white man will not work with the Chinese or Japanese cooly, she must reform her enthat mean? tire crews and have them all white men and citizens.

Mr. KAHN. I should like to suggest in that very connection that this line is in direct competition with a Japanese line which employs all cheap cooly laborers, and also in direct competition with an English line which employs that kind of labor.

Mr. LITTAUER. In connection with that I will show the difference in the wages and in the cost of running.

The next route is the one referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts, specifically stated to start from some port of the United States north of Cape Mendocino, which means Puget Route No. 6 extends from Puget Sound to Japan, China, and the Philippines. No single American ship now traverses this route, which could be used under the conditions proposed. It is true that Puget Sound is the terminal of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific Railways and that a line thence to the Orient is necessary as an outlet and inlet for freight destined to and from Asia. Mr. James J. Hill, who controls these sys-tems of railways, could, like every other American, take advantage of this subsidy if he met its requirements, but he does not own a single vessel to-day that could possibly be used for the purposes of this bill. He, or anyone else, who took advantage of this subsidy, would be compelled to build at least six 16-knot ships which would, because of the great length of the route, have to be ships of the largest carrying capacity—of at least 10,000 tons burden. The ships to-day known as "the Hill ships," sailing from Puget Sound, never go beyond China. They have no communication with Manila.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. LITTAUER. I should like five minutes more. Mr. SHERLEY. I will now yield to the gentleman that same

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LITTAUER. Now, gentlemen, from Puget Sound to the Orient, to Japan, China, and on to Manila, there does to-day sail an American line—the Boston Steamship Line. of this line again could not become available under this subsidy because of their slow speed, but this line has now been driven out of existence in spite of the fact that it has the quartermaster's contract with Manila, but runs without subsidy, because the Japanese are subsidizing their lines to such an extent as to make us realize plainly that Japan wants the supremacy of the trade in the Pacific; and this Boston line is now practically out of existence

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Three out of the five steamers have quit within the last thirty days.

Mr. LITTAUER. Now we come to the Oceanic Steamship Company, which runs to Hawaii, which runs to Samoa, and to New Zealand, and over to Sydney. This line has 16-knot ships, and she has three vessels now running. The subsidy which they receive is based on the act of 1891 of $2 a mile, which amounts in round figures to $280,000, and the provisions of this act arbitrarily gives them $200,000 in addition to the subsidies which they now receive. The officials of the line, as the gentleman from California has stated a few days ago, show that their balance sheet is a horribly bad one; they say that they are losing something like $373,000 a year. We felt that if we gave them $200,000 toward that the line would be able to continue, because of the beautiful and fair prospects that there are in developing the trade there; and to show you what this trade is between the United States and Australasia I will say that from 1896 up to 1900 the imports were $20,000,000 and the exports were $79,000,000.

From 1900 to 1904, since this line has been in existence, our imports increased from $20,000,000 to $24,000,000, and to-day are $29,000,000, while the exports increased from $79,000,000 to $118,750,000. Surely, a trade that can make such a showing when in its infancy is worth preserving. It has been won, in part, through the Oceanic Line, and gives promise of still greater increase. In order to maintain mail ships on the Pacific Ocean in accordance with our American ideas and requirements, as demanded by our statutes, a greater subsidy must necessarily be given. The requirement that a necessary percentage of American citizens must form part of the crews of our mail-subsidized steamers prevents the employment of Chinese seamen or stokers or the employment of lascar crews. The Oceanic Line pays in wages $235,440 a year. If the same crews were put on a basis of the Canadian-Australian Line the wages would amount to $176,690. If they were put on the basis of the Peninsular-Oriental Line, with lascar crews, they would amount to only $123,404, and if paid on the basis of the Japanese Line they would amount

The wages paid on our American lines are practically a little more than double what are paid on the English lines with lascar crews; two and a half times what is paid on the competing Japanese line. The average wage per month on the Oceanic Line S. S. Sonora is $41.65, while on the British line S. S. Orizaba it is about $17, and on the Japanese line S. S. America Maru, $13.95. In addition to the cost of labor must be added the price of fuel, which on the Pacific Ocean far exceeds the cost on the Atlantic. There is a practical and additional reason for the desirability for retaining the ships of this Oceanic Line as auxiliaries to our Navy. If we compare the cost of this subsidy with the cost of maintenance of like ships among our cruisers, we will find that three of these cruis--the Buffalo, the Yankee, and the Prairie-are practically the same size as the three ships of the Oceanic Line, and, with one-half the horsepower, cost us to maintain in 1904 over a million dollars—three times the amount of subsidy given to the Oceanic Line, carrying the mails and developing the trade of the United States. And it is on these grounds that we be-lieve that we are justified in increasing the mail subvention to this Oceanic Line, which receives but $20,000 per voyage—a lower subvention than is given by either British, Japanese, German, or French lines competing with it, the German line receiving $41,000 a voyage and the French line $47,000, in comparison with the $20,000 now paid and the $30,000 per voyage we propose to pay.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] called attention yesterday to the fact that the subsidy to the Oceanic Line was $280,000, while she paid in wages but $235,000. That is true, but compare these figures with those of the British Peninsular and Oriental Line, whose subsidy is for all her services £353,873, equal to $1,769,365, while her total expenditure for officers and crews is but £315,262, equal to $1,576,310. So this British line is also subsidized in greater amount than her roll. There can be no proper comparison between pay roll and subsidy.

The fullest development of our domestic commerce proceeds at a rate so rapid that we outstrip all records; we have progressed beyond the development of our railways and are the marvel of mankind. Our lands are covered with farms, the chimneys of our factories dot the land, a network of railways connects all. Our production demands that we turn our endeavors more and more each year to commercial expansion in trade across the seas. It already requires five and one-half million tons of shipping to handle the eighteen hundred million dollars of exports and thirteen hundred million dollars of imports, at a cost for ocean carriage of two hundred millions of dollars, of which ships flying the Stars and Stripes carry but 12-per cent.

Our shipbuilders, our sailors, and our merchants will again prove that they excel those of other nations in ingenuity and enterprise, as they did so auspiciously in the first half of the last century, if the Government but gives them proper protection. Great Britain with mail subsidies stood by her shipping and shipowners, with results that have added to her wealth, her strength, and her preeminence among nations

The United States expends at least $100,000,000 each year on s Navy. We will spend $400,000,000 in building the Panama its Navy. We will spend $400,000,000 in building the radial. Can we not, therefore, afford to devote five millions each year for carrying foreign mails, to the encouragement of our shipping? If we do not do so, we will soon realize that the four hundred millions spent on the Panama Canal will act as subsidy to the trade of foreign ships only.

Our exports and imports now afford employment to foreign Our Post-Office Department expends the funds of the United States in payment to vessels of foreign nations which are available as auxiliaries to foreign navies, whose officers and seamen are being educated at our expense as a naval reserve for our rivals and possible enemies, Government is lacking in similar resources essential to our national defense. In this way our commerce is in reality an enormous subsidy to the sea power of foreign nations, building up the sea power of foreigners at the cost of our own. An aroused patriotic sentiment, favored by economic conditions, demands that the United States delay no longer in reviving her merchant marine through mail subsidies, which have in the experience of all nations proved successful.

I appeal to each one of you not to permit local or partisan consideration to influence your vote when the defense of the nation, the preservation of its power, and the prosperity of its people are at stake.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 25483. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 24815. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return the bill (H. R. 21121) entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to Marcus Wood."

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 925) authorizing the construction of a steam vessel for the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 25440. An act granting an increase of pension to Catharine Lipes

H.R. 25005. An act granting an increase of pension to Emeline H. Hardie;

H. R. 21721. An act granting a pension to John R. Kissinger; H. R. 19589. An act granting a pension to Aaron Davis; H. R. 10574. An act granting a pension to Edward W. Hoban;

and

H. R. 9767. An act granting a pension to William J. Crane.

SUBSIDY BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry indeed that my friend the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Spight] is detained at his home here in Washington by illness. He is the ranking member of the minority of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and is thoroughly conversant with this subject, having given many years to the study of this matter. This is a very interesting bill, one of the most important that has come before the House this session, and I regret exceedingly that the majority, on the other side of the House, has decided that it shall be put through at this session of Congress. should be given to it at least one full week's discussion.

The bill has been before the Committee on the Merchant Marine for the last four years, at least ever since I have been a member of that committee. It is no new proposition. May I say that in looking over some of the proceedings of Congress find that away back in 1876 a resolution was brought in from the Committee on the Judiciary to investigate the charge that $900,000 had been used improperly to influence legislation upon a ship-subsidy bill. Mr. Lord, from the Committee on the Ju-diciary, submitted the following, under date of August 9, 1876, and taken from the report of the committees Nos. 815 to 842, first session of the Forty-fourth Congress. The opening paragraph of the report of that committee investigating the charge was that $900,000 had been improperly used to influence legislation on ship subsidy, and is as follows:

was that $900,000 had been improperly used to inhuence legislation on ship subsidy, and is as follows:

That the Committee on Ways and Means of the Forty-third Congress, after a thorough investigation of the charge that a large sum of money was used to secure the passage through Congress of an increased annual appropriation to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in the nature of a subsidy, report, among other things:

"The results of the evidence are that about $900,000 was disbursed upon the allegation that it was used in aid of the passage of the act now under investigation. That about $565,000 appears to have been paid to the exclusive use of persons having no official connection with such legislation, and that the disposition of the remaining $335,000 remains in doubt upon the evidence presented, but without any testimony showing that it was a reward paid to any person at that time a Member of either House of Congress, and that the uncertainty attending the disposition of this latter sum is owing to the refusal of William S. King to testify the truth, and to the failure or refusal of John G. Schumaker to present all the facts which the committee believe it was in his power to give."

The committee report the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That a copy of the testimony taken before the Committee on Ways and Means upon the question of a corrupt use of money to procure the passage of an act providing for an additional subsidy for the China Mail Service be delivered to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, to be by him laid before the House at the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, to the end that they make further inquiry and take due action upon the questions affecting William S. King and John G. Schumaker, and further proceed therein as they shall deem just.

"Resolved, That the Clerk of this House transmit to the United and take due action apolicy.

John G. Schumaker, and further proceed therein as they shall deem just.

"Resolved. That the Clerk of this House transmit to the United States district attorney a copy of the evidence taken before the Committee on Ways and Means upon the question of a corrupt use of money to procure the passage of an act providing for an additional subsidy for the China mail service, with directions to lay so much of the same as relates to the truth of the testimony given by William S. King and John G. Schumaker before the grand jury of said District for such action as the law seems to require."

The above resolutions were adopted by the House, and a copy of the evidence taken before the Committee on Ways and Means upon the question of a corrupt use of money to procure the passage of an act providing for an additional subsidy for the China mail service has been transmitted to the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia by the Clerk of the House in accordance with said resolution. The whole subject is properly before the court, the offenses charged are crimes by statute, and the Constitution provides—

[Applause.]

[Applause,]

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOULDEN. With pleasure.
Mr. KAHN. The gentleman does not mean to say that there has been any money used corruptly to influence this legislation which is now pending?

Mr. GOULDEN. I was speaking about the legislation in the Forty-fourth Congress, and wished to show this House and the country that thirty-one years ago this powerful shipbuilding lobby that have been so much in evidence during my time here have been busily at work on Congress all these years.

Mr. KAHN. That is a last year's bird's nest.

Mr. GOULDEN. It does not make any difference. conclusively that the ship-subsidy lobbyists were as active then as they are now, and have been ever since I have been a member the committee. [Applause on the Democratic side.] matter what interest appeared before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, you found ship-subsidy lobbyists there, always ready to fight all other interests that sought legis-lation to advance matters of public interest. I shall never forget the remarks of a well-known manufacturer from central New York, who was interrupted at a hearing by one of these regularly attendant ship-subsidy lobbyists. He said to him: "If you shipbuilding people stayed at home and attended to your own business as well as you attend the session of Congress, looking for funds from the United States Treasury, you would not be here begging for money to be taken from the people.

An explanation as to the influences that brought this bill out of the committee might not be uninteresting to this House. you all know, a commission was appointed in the Fifty-eighth Congress, first session, to investigate this matter, which they did, expending $20,000 in traveling all over the country. The result was a report in four volumes. Not satisfied with that, which did not seem to effect a cure, did not change the public sentiment over the country, which is against the ship subsidy, hearings were held during the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, and the following, among others, appeared before that I will read a few of the names, so that the Memcommittee. I will read a few of the names, so that the Members may understand the influence back of this iniquitous shipsubsidy measure: Mr. William Livingstone, president of the Lake Carriers' Association; Mr. Henry Goulder, counsel for the same association; Mr. Charles R. Hansen, of New London, Conn., president of the Eastern Shipbuilding Company; Mr. Edward S. Cramp, of Philadelphia, of the great Cramp Shipbuilding Company at Philadelphia; Mr. Samuel S. Sewell, of Bath, Me., of the shipbuilders' firm of Sewell Bros. & Co., of that city; Mr. E. H. Garey, chairman of the board of directors of the United States Steel Corporation; Mr. Edward S. Plumber, of Bath, Me., another shipbuilder; Capt. S. T. Bowles, formerly of the United States Navy, Chief of the Bureau of Construction for a time, but now president of the Fore River Shipbuilding Company, of Massachusetts. So I could continue and read other distinguished names of gentlemen who appeared before this committee at its public hearings, all urging ship subsidy.

There was a dispute with regard to the Boiler Makers and Iron-Ship Builders' Association. Several of the committee of the latter association came before that Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and claimed that their association, 50,000 strong, had indorsed the ship-subsidy bill. When Mr. Gompers, who is the head of the American Federation of Labor, came before the committee voluntarily to deny the claim made by the representatives of that organization, a telegram was introduced, dated Dayton, Ohio, April 10, which was sent to Mr. Gompers from the annual convention of that organization. It was as follows:

Letter received. Boiler makers in convention unanimously voted against enactment of ship subsidy; also denounce their former action.

It seems that some three or four years ago that union did pass a measure approving of the ship-subsidy project then in Congress. Mr. Gompers appeared before the committee and He was asked some questions by Mr. LITTLEgave testimony. FIELD, what he thought of this measure, as to what effect it would have upon the shipbuilding interests. Mr. Gompers replied that he did not believe it would produce the result anticipated by its friends—that is, of giving a stimulus to the industry or creating energy or renewed life in the industry—but that if it did, he thought the principle involved was a wrong one, and he had other objections to the enactment of the bill, particularly so far as the conscription was concerned, which intensified, if possible, the opposition that he and the interests he represented had against this bill.

The claim was made in my own district by the gentleman who was my opponent on the Republican ticket that I was the enemy of labor because I had worked against the ship-subsidybill. The issue went before the people with the following results, that he obtained 17,943 votes out of a total vote of nearly 62,000. I believe, therefore, that I am fully justified in opposing this measure of ship subsidy.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman a ques-

Mr. GOULDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Florida for a question.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I notice in this bill that the first section provides that the Postmaster-General may enter into a contract with certain parties to carry the mails from different ports on the Atlantic and one or more ports on the Gulf to the Isthmus of Panama. What I wish to know is why the committee restricted the carrying of mails to the Isthmus of Panama?

Mr. GOULDEN. In reply to the gentleman from Florida, I will say that I know of no reason. The bill was brought in by a new member of the committee, who took the place of one who was sick. He was the foster father of the bill, who engineered the bill through the committee and brought out a favorable report, and therefore I trust the gentleman from Florida will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. Littauer] why that was done, for I am unable to answer.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Could you tell whether or not the committee would be willing to accept an amendment including the Central American states with Panama?

Mr. GOULDEN. I see no objection, but would respectfully refer that to the honored chairman of the committee when he gets upon the floor in his own time, and will allow him to answer the question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, it may probably not interrupt the gentleman's argument if he will point out wherein there is a word or syllable in this bill that was not in the Senate bill.

Mr GOULDEN. I am not discussing the bill reported from the House committee.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But I heard you say that Mr. LITTAUER had introduced the bill-

Mr. GOULDEN. Had brought the bill before the committee and read it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is not every section and every provision of this bill substantially in the Senate bill?

Mr. GOULDEN. In reply to the gentleman I stated that Mr. LITTAUER had brought the bill into the committee and read it. Mr. GROSVENOR. What bill?

Mr. GROSVENOR. What bill?
Mr. GOULDEN. This bill, the one we are now considering. Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. LITTAUER proposed an amendment after I had had a printed amendment, and he took it and submitted it to the committee, and if the gentleman desires, I will give him every step, each amendment offered from time to time.

Mr. GOULDEN. The gentleman may do that in his own time.

Mr. SPARKMAN. If I am not out of order, maybe the gentleman from Ohio will answer the question. Mr. GOULDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland

[Mr. GILL]

Mr. GILL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if under the first section there is provided any opportunity, for citizens who may desire to organize a corpora-tion or company for the purpose of building ships to compete for the subsidy that is granted for carrying the mails from the Atlantic ports:

Mr. GOULDEN. I see no reason why they could not do so. Mr. GILL. Is it not provided under this bill that the granting of this subsidy is entirely in the hands of the Postmaster-

True.

Mr. GILL. And he may prefer any citizen whom he desires to prefer at the expense of all the other citizens of every other city of the country.

Mr. GOULDEN. That is an insinuation that the Postmaster-General would not do his duty honestly and efficiently, which I am not ready to admit of any member of the Cabinet.

I am not desirous of insinuating that he would not do his duty honestly; but under this law is there any opportunity for citizens of Philadelphia or citizens of Baltimore to submit a competitive proposition to the Postmaster-General for the purpose of obtaining this subsidy?

Mr. GOULDEN. I think there is no doubt they would have that right, but-

Mr. GILL. I ask the gentleman to state to the committee what there is in the bill that would give them that right.

Mr. GOULDEN. There is nothing in the bill; but the Post-master-General should advertise, so that anyone could answer that advertisement and make a proposal for the contract

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does not the gentleman think that the shipbuilding trust, the parties he has just referred to as lobbying for this bill for years, would have by far the greater chance to get the subsidy?

Mr. GOULDEN. I have no doubt in the world that the gentleman is correct.

As the bill before you for consideration is the last and weakest of a long series of proposals for ship subsidies, it may very appropriately be called an "anticlimax." It is a far cry from It is a far cry from the big things dreamed of by its original advocates, and men like the late Senator Hanna would have considered it the merest apology. Each year has seen a reduction or modification of the original proposition, until to-day there is hardly more left than the name of subsidy. But this very history of conces-sion proves the injustice of the subsidy doctrine and foreshadows its final defeat. A just measure never has to concede or compromise, confident that its truth will be certain of vindication. But the more an unjust measure gives up for the sake of expediency or temporary success the more it brands itself as weak; the more it shows its fear of ultimate exposure and destruction.

The bill reported by the Merchant Marine Committee, and now before you for consideration, is not only utterly weak, but it is really hypocritical. It does not pretend to be a subsidy measure; it claims merely to provide for the carrying of mail to certain South American and Asiatic ports. As the report of the majority says, "it is an ocean-mail bill pure and simple, with incidental provision for a naval reserve;" also "This measure is not a general ship-subsidy bill." It would therefore, in my judgment, be in order to recommit the bill to the Post-Office and Post-Roads Committee, whence such a bill should Since the House is not a judge of motives, but of methods and measures, it should look to its Post-Office Committee for mail bills and rebuke the encroaching of one committee on the province of another.

But, putting aside the rules of procedure, it must be evident that the resort to a mail bill is a mere trick to have the House pass a subsidy bill unawares; but the disguise is so wretchedly poor that it deserves more pity than ridicule. The bill should be indignantly rejected as an insult to the intelligence and dignity of the House. If a subsidy is wanted, by all means let us have one; but do not call it a mail bill; do not give us a wolf in sheep's clothing.

In presenting the bill for consideration the Committee on Merchant Marine urges its passage as an aid to the development of American mercantile shipping, the means employed being payment for a fast-mail service to South America and Asia and the providing of a naval reserve. The subvention for carrying the fast mail is to be paid to seven American lines, two on the Atlantic coast to South America, one from a Gulf port to the Isthmus of Panama, one from the Pacific coast to South America, and three from Pacific ports to the Philippines, Asia, and Australia. It is not contended that the mail service is so poor at present that it needs improving by better payments; but it is claimed that the establishment of better and faster mail communication will open up new avenues for American trade; that it will develop American commerce and the merchant marine.

But trade was never yet developed and never will be by a line of fast steamers or even by quick mail communication. main principle of trade is selling a man what he needs at the lowest price, and international trade is simply an extension of this principle. When a nation sells to another and desires to get a profit from the transaction, it must necessarily employ the cheapest medium of transportation, and this medium, as the history of commerce will show, has never been a fast line of steamers in competition with slower-going vessels, the so-called "tramps." Steam transportation is too expensive for every purpose except the carriage of passengers and such highly taxed freight as mail. It is a fact well established by experience that water-borne trade is only fostered by the "tramp" variety of vessels; none other can carry freight economically. The present enviable carrying ability of other nations is due to their great fleets of these vessels, and no fast steamship lines, even with subsidies or mail subventions, have ever been able to compete.

And yet the majority report of the committee boasts that the present measure "does not give a dollar of subsidy or bounty to cargo vessels of the 'tramp' type"—that is, American trade is to be developed by giving Government aid to vessels which produce no trade, which do not carry the cargoes, and never will. The speed trials of the ocean sprinters are to be made remunerative as well as exciting; but the real cargo carriers, whom everyone affects to despise, whose only fault is that they deliver the goods at the lowest cost—these are warned to keep away; no "tramps" need apply.

The bill is also presented to us as an extension of an existing practice of the Government. The majority report of the committee says:

The proposed * * * legislation follows authoritative national precedents; there is nothing new or experimental in it.

Again-

It can not be too strongly emphasized that all that is proposed * * * is to apply a well-established policy of the United States to ocean routes not reached in a satisfactory way by existing ocean mail

But the report also states that the present policy has only been successful within certain limits; that it has given us a fast postal service for distances not exceeding 4,000 miles from our shores. The experience of sixteen years, which have elapsed since the present law was passed, has confirmed the expert opin-ion then expressed by merchants and others, that the law would completely fail to provide postal service on routes greater than 4,000 miles.

The law of 1891 has so far failed in its purpose that only a few persons outside of those engaged in ocean commerce know that any subventions are paid at all, and only five or six lines are at present receiving such compensation. These lines are evidently of such slight importance that the report omitted to name them. The law failed in its purpose, we are told, because the compensation was too small, and the present bill endeavors to apply the proper remedy—more Government money.

If the only intent of the law of 1891 was to establish fast mail lines, then we agree with the majority report in saying that it has failed. But if it had the further objects of fostering American trade, developing a merchant marine, and providing auxiliary vessels for the Navy, then most lamentably has it For where is the trade produced by the present law? is the shipping it has developed? And if the present Where is the shipping it has developed? And if the present policy of the Government has failed to establish fast mail lines or to foster trade, how can its extension result in anything but If the present expenditure is practically a greater failure? waste of money, how can a greater expenditure be justified? In homely phrase, it would be throwing good money after bad.

Instead of proposing an extension of such a poor policy, the present bill should have provided for its repeal. And in admitting the inadequacy of the law of 1891, while at the same time asking for its extension, the committee has stabbed its own bill with a two-edged sword. The present measure for postal payments under contract is presented to us not only as an established practice of our Government, but as "the practice of every other maritime nation in the world." "Great Britain and Germany, as well as France, Italy, Spain, Japan, and every other power which has any trade worth mentioning, do follow exactly the policy of past legisla-tion in America and of this proposed bill, of creating and maintaining an ocean mail service in their own steamers under their

This particular argument has always been one of the strongest in the armory of the subsidy hunters, and has probably brought more converts to the cause than all the other arguments combined. And yet it contains a fallacy so glaring that the ease of its conquests is more astonishing than the boldness of its propounders. The fallacy consists in so combining or alternating two statements of fact that they appear to be one, or one fact seems to be the result of the other. This is an ancient trick, having been taught to students of rhetoric and oratory when Greece was young and Rome was yet unborn. It has been used countless times to persuade men, sometimes against their will, to the support of innumerable doctrines, and its use in the ship-subsidy agitation is but another instance of its noxious character.

We are told that every nation with an ocean trade worth mentioning pays subventions for fast mail service-that is, certain nations have a large ocean trade, and these certain nations pay for fast mail service. The subsidy advocates reiterate these two statements so often, combine them in so many ways, and lay such emphasis upon them, that the minds of the hearers and lay such emphasis upon them, that the confused and draw the inference that one follows from the other—that is, that if a nation pays mail subventions it is bound to have a large ocean trade. This conclusion is not always stated by the advocate of subsidies, and of course it does not exist in the premised statements, but it is the conclusion which the advocate wishes the hearer to draw.

But as a matter of fact these two statements are not related as cause and effect; they exist coincidentally very often, but coincidence can not be construed into self-dependence. fact that the United States pays mail subventions, but the large ocean trade which should result does not exist. And in the case of Great Britain, mail subventions are paid to but a comparatively small part of the steam vessels sailing under its flag. Unsubsidized lines, as well as great fleets of "tramp" ships, exist in spite of all the mail subventions and subsidies, and are Great Britain's glory of the seas. These ships are more than a match for the few subsidized lines, keenly compete with them for business, and are a shining example of what can be done without government assistance. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

France pays $8,000,000 a year for mail purposes, against the $7,000,000 of Great Britain, and yet, while France has a good ocean trade, it is insignificant as compared with Great Britain's; but if the doctrine held good France should outclass Great Britain, because it pays more for mail subventions and subsidies. Germany's ocean trade is also out of all proportion to the comparatively small sum paid for fast mail service. And so .on through the list. It is not necessary to go into the history of our own country's subsidy experience. The experiment with the Collins Line, to mention only one, is enough to show that the payment of subventions or subsidies does not necessarily bring an ocean trade or foster commerce.

The closer this phase of the subject is examined the more we are convinced that nations may pay subventions without thereby acquiring a respectable ocean trade, and that the combination of these two statements is merely a trick used by subsidy hunters for the purpose of obtaining converts to their cause.

Another contention of the committee in presenting the present bill is that its provisions will only apply to a limited class of vessels, those of large size and of great speed. We are told that the "measure is not a general ship-subsidy bill." Has it occurred to its advocates that this is class legislation of the most pronounced type. In spite of the American hatred of everything which savors of discrimination, of the general outcry at every measure which has even the appearance of being for a special interest, the committee brings in a bill with almost the boast that it is not a general measure. Congress has passed through many troublous sessions, has endured great agonizing throes in its efforts to enact laws that would prevent discrimination of one kind or another. The antirebate laws, railroad-rate measures, pure-food laws, and many other projects bear witness to its labor. The President, aided by his numerous administrative helpers, is engaged in strenuous warfare against every form of special interest; courts are crowded with litigation between governments and States and their own and other States' corporations and individuals.

And yet the Committee on Merchant Marine dares to come into the House with a forced measure especially designed to favor a small class of shipowners. If subsidies or subventions are a good thing, why not throw them open to general competition? Why so design them that they can be secured only by the owners of certain vessels, stating positively that not a dollar can be secured by the so-called "tramp" ships? Is the committee trying to undo in a day the work it has taken Congress years to accomplish? Is the object of the present bill the inauguration of a new era of special legislation?

The very boast of the committee that this bill is not a general one should of itself be enough to kill it, but combined with all the other objections cited it makes its presentation in the House an affront.

It would be easy to go further and say that the real beneficiaries of the ocean mail bill are almost named in it; the committee hints darkly at it in stating that on the Pacific coast one-half of the vessels needed to undertake the service are already afloat. If the lines are already in existence, then they must be making a present profit, and no subsidy is needed. How can this assistance be justified in face of such facts? The threat that the present lines will have to be abandoned unless assistance is given is idle indeed; and, as it has not been definitely stated by anyone connected with the present lines, we can dismiss it as without other weight than as a temporary catcher of votes for subsidies.

Profits are already secured in the Pacific trade, and have been for years; and as long as there is money in it the lines will be in existence. Payments to these lines would therefore be a gift, in spite of all denials to the contrary; subventions would simply be so much extra profit secured for giving no more service than is rendered at present for the usual profits. The bill is so precise in its terms that the real beneficiaries are already being named in public places; and it is not forgotten that the author of the bill, a member of the committee but twenty-four hours before presenting it, is a business and social friend of the owner of one of the existing lines.

The passage of the present bill is urged on the ground that it will help to create a few more ships flying the American flag. No man in this House has a more genuine love of the flag than I have, yet it grieves me deeply to have this flag used to shield every form of graft and public plunder. I love the flag too much to have it used as an argument for the enactment of vicious legislation. My strongest desire is to revive our mer-chant marine and to have the American flag floating from the mastheads of ships in every harbor in the world; but if the flag has to fly at the expense of the people, if its presence in foreign harbors means the robbery of the people at home, then I hope it will remain a stranger abroad. The flag should not thus be dishonored, and I object with all my strength to the use of it as an excuse for such questionable objects. I object to waving it with one hand while the other is robbing the Treasury.

The flag is too sacred a symbol to be used thus; those who love it never appeal to it except with respect and emotion. when a measure has to rely for its passage upon the mere mention of the flag, and it is dragged from its sacred place to do duty as a weapon in legislation, the vandals should be punished by the utter condemnation of their projects. [Applause.]

Another stock argument of the subsidy advocates is the help twill give to American labor in the shipyards, as well as on the ships. We are told that the shipbuilding industry needs reviving, that the American workmen engaged in it have been deprived of their share of American prosperity for fifty years past, and that they should now come into their own. The committee predicts that in less than a year our coast shipyards, with the present boom exhausted, will be facing the severest depression in their history. The present bill will provide work at good wages for several years to come to thousands of skilled workmen.

Two fallacies are involved in this line of reasoning, the economic fallacy of endeavoring to sustain a dying industry, and the fallacy of trying to create prosperity by artificial means. If the shipbuilding industry is doomed to die, it must be for natural causes, and the effort to keep it alive would be like pushing water uphill. But the truth of the matter is that the industry is not dying, the yards are now enjoying a boom, as even the committee admits, and there is no reason to suppose that it is going to collapse. As long as there is profit in sailing ships, so long will there be ships, and if Congress will make it profitable in ways that are economically just the shipping business will continue to boom.

It is profits that will create ships and not subsidies. And if the committee is really interested in the American shipbuilder it can easily find ways to assist him without dipping into the Treasury. And then it would be just as well to wait until the workmen asked for help. Judging by the way all subsidy measures are denounced by labor organizations, by the farmers, and the sailors' unions, it would seem that they are being used as a cloak to hide the real purpose of the measure.

We are told that American labor-intelligent, genuine American labor-recognizes and appreciates the advantage of having ships built in this country, at the public expense, of course, to carry the mails, passengers, and freight. Such organizations as the American Federation of Labor, the Patrons of Husbandry (granges), the American Seamen's Union, and others, must surely be included in the ranks of intelligent, genuine American labor; and yet they all denounce ship subsidies, mail subvention, and all other such propositions in language that can not be misunderstood. American labor can not be used as the scapegoat for American trusts, and if the shipbuilders want their chestnuts pulled out of the American Treasury they will have to find another monkey to do it.

In last year's campaign in my district, the Eighteenth New York, the Republican candidate for Congress made this an issue. The result showed that in a total vote of 61,355 he received only

17,943 votes. [Applause.]

One of the most laughable arguments for the passage of this bill is that it will help to "bust" the foreign steamship trust which controls the present service between New York and South America. The committee solemnly assures us that we are dependent for this service upon an arrogant and unscrupulous foreign steamship trust or combine and that these foreign monopolists have a wholesome dread of national legislation for the es tablishment of an independent line.

The committee seems to have a horror of this arrogant foreign trust, more horror than the foreign trust has of our legislation. And in great pity for the dear people the committee is determined to bust up this foreign trust by establishing a new trust of American brand, guaranteed to do the same service for more money and take the subsidy besides.

We can understand fighting fire with fire, and are even familiar with the process of busting up one trust by having it gobbled up by a bigger one. But that this latter should be proposed as a serious reason for the passage of legislation to help the people would be farcical if it did not show the tendency of Republican

But in spite of all denials the present bill, by its very nature, is a subsidy measure; while ostensibly providing for carrying the mails on certain ocean routes, its real object is to subsidize certain steamship lines already in existence or about to be organized for the purpose of receiving the subvention.

The word "subsidy" has grown to be as ugly in its significance as the word "graft;" and, as a matter of fact, there is not very much difference between them-graft is the receiving of remuneration in return for favors given, the service and the pay being disguised as much as possible. A subsidy is the same thing, but the service and the pay are sanctioned by law; the service is usually an indirect one and without special benefit to the general public; and the pay is usually out of all proportion to the pay granted.

It is the taking of money intended for general purposes, and collected from the people, and devoted to special interests and purposes. They should be condemned on this very point, if no others could be adduced; it is too late in the day of progress, and the people are too wide awake, for the Government to go into the special-interest business. Rebates have been scored so often and so relentlessly in the past that the Congress should refuse to even entertain a measure which embodies every principle of rebating.

The Government has no moral right to take funds intended for general purposes and spend them in subsidizing the ship-ping industry. It savors of robbery to take the people's money and turn it over to any special industry. The protective tariff is bad enough in fostering special interests, but its methods are not so barefaced; the money is not turned over directly by the Government, but is taken by the opportunity to increase prices under cover of the tariff charge. But subsidies are directly voted to the beneficiaries, and no effort is made to hide the grant; they are a deliberate paying out of Government money for a purpose not directly profitable to it; it is very different from the paying of salarles, maintaining an army or navy, putting up new buildings, or improving rivers or harbors. Even pensions have the excuse of being for services already rendered and not adequately paid for. But subsides have no such warrant; they are really for services of no kind or character, either given or promised.

If the individual taxpayer could be consulted as to the purposes for which he would approve the expenditure of the taxes, he surely would never consent to subsidies; and if the matter were left to a general vote of the country, or an Administration were to live or die upon such an issue, could even the most rabid subsidy advocate doubt of the result?

If we look at the matter from the standpoint of economics, apart from the general aspect of the people's interests, we find that subsidies have been condemned by every student of the subject, as well as by the verdict of experience. Under very rare conditions it is conceivable that a subsidy might be of assistance; if a country was young, with resources undeveloped and with industries existing more in imagination than in fact, a subsidy might assist in starting the wheels of progress. such conditions can not by any stretch of reason be applied to our country; such an idea is so ridiculous that it has not even been rumored in the agitation for subsidies.

It could therefore only be defended as an aid to an unprofitable business in a country otherwise prosperous. As explained by such a distinguished advocate as Secretary Root, subsidies should be granted to the shipping business because the tariff has made it unprofitable; the country has derived so much from the tariff that it should be willing to make a cash return (or rebate) to the one industry which has not participated in the general prosperity. But if the business has been ruined by the tariff, the only honest way to restore it would be to adjust the tariff to existing conditions, not by voting a cash rebate. The tariff has been held sacred for so long that it is interesting to have a great Administration official admit that it has done some harm, that there is some clay mixed with the idol's gold. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

If a business is unprofitable and the cause is due to such a holy thing as the tariff, what excuse is there for its further existence? Instead of a plea for its life there should be a demand for its revision; the tree which bears no fruit should be cut down. If the decline of an industry would mean a calamity to the general country or would work harm to even a majority of the people, there might be some excuse for thought, and even for cash assistance. But it can not be shown that the death of the shipping trade in this country would injure even a small percentage of the country or its people, and all efforts to this very point have been failures. The closing of all the country's shipyards to-morrow would not cause a ripple on the surface of prosperity and would hardly be known to the public.

Therefore the plea for assistance to this industry is built on pure imagination and is made by a very limited number of ship owners and builders, and its weakness is covered by appeals to love of flag and American glory and such other sentiments. It would be unfair and dishonest to pay out money to keep life in a decaying business, and no sentimental appeal can change the facts.

There is no guaranty that if the business was kept alive for a few years by Government aid that it would then be in a position to support itself and could get along without the aid. If such a guaranty was given, perhaps a few more advocates of subsidies might be found and a subsidy measure might receive more consideration in this House; but the hollowness of the appeal is all the more apparent by this very absence of promise from the beneficiaries.

But above and beyond all other facts bearing on this contention of a dying industry is the very important fact that the industry is not dying at all, but is very much alive. In fact, it is thriving as it has not done in years, and the prospects are good for a long continuance of life and prosperity. This is admitted even by the majority of the committee which reported the present bill to the House. It is admitted by all connected with the business, with the single exception of the few people interested in the fast steamship lines, which have a very small freighting trade and depend for profit on passengers and mail. But this fact of an infant industry very much grown up and enjoying very good health knocks the bottom out of all arguments or appeals based on its sickness or death. It shows very plainly that the request for subsidies comes from a mere fraction of a single industry out of a vast number of industries in this great country. To vote such a subsidy would be to placate a special section of a very special interest and would be exposing ourselves to the laughter and ridicule of the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.

Economically it is not possible to keep an industry from dying by granting Government assistance. Decay and death are due to natural causes, and one can not be counteracted and the other prevented except by natural remedies. Things are not always what they seem in this world, and death is not always what its name popularly implies, but is more truly a rebirth of new and better conditions. Life is an evolution or upward progress, and better conditions are always succeeding to those which pass away. Just as men "rise on stepping-stones of their dead selves to better things," so do all other phases of this life and of natural existences. Therefore death does not imply loss, but simply a change to better things. Not only is there a survival of the fittest, but also a new birth of things more fit.

Mr. Root states the case very clearly in his speech before the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress. He says that one of the two disadvantages under which the American shipowner labors, of artificial creation, is the protective tariff, which has raised the standard of wages and living. But the eminent Secretary did not state all the other facts about the protective tariff which make it a disadvantage to American shipowners.

The tariff is a tax which the American consumer pays on most of the articles imported into the country. It is a method of raising revenue which has stood the test of time and experience, and has been tried by nations and countries of every size and species. In our own country it has served a double purpose for a great many years, but gradually the minor or subsidiary purpose has grown to be the principal one, or so our Republican friends would have us believe. Originally intended as a means of raising revenue for Government purposes, it was found to be a good weapon of defense to home industries. The use of it for the latter purpose grew with familiarity, will in these times its use is really an abuse.

Under cover of a high protective tariff the American consumer pays excessive prices for his imported articles; but this high price enables the home manufacturer to charge the same price for his wares, the difference in cost, represented by the tariff, going into his own pocket as increased profits. High prices are now considered to be a blessing to the country, raising the standard of wages and living; how this is reasoned out is beyond the comprehension of any ordinary man, and even the protective philosophers can not explain it. The country has been prosperous in spite of the high tariff and not because of it; but the prosperity has been taken as a direct result of the tariff, and this statement has been dinned into American ears so long and so continuously that the people seem to believe it. They should not forget that the cost of living is fully 30 per cent higher as the result.

But the country has developed so enormously, its resources are so rich and vast, and the actual prosperity due to these causes is so real and palpable that the people have not had the time or inclination to examine into the conditions by which they pay excessive prices for all they eat, drink, and wear. But these excessive prices have enabled the manufacturers to grow rich and powerful, to combine and recombine, and form into vast corporations and trusts such as the world has never seen before. So rich and powerful are they that the American people are growing terrified at them in spite of the prosperity, and we hear murmurings and mutterings on every hand, and none more pronounced than from the very heart of the Republican

The tariff is responsible for these trusts, but not for the prosperity; and the American people are disgorging a great part of the fruits of prosperity in order to fatten these combinations. At the same time the tariff does not keep out imports, for these have grown from year to year, although it must be admitted that our exports have grown in a still larger proportion, until now they really exceed the imports; as Secretary Root says, we have become a creditor instead of a debtor nation. But the greatest sign of our prosperity is the ease with which we assimilate the imports, in spite of the enormous sums we pay in the way of high taxes. After all, it is imports which produce the revenue; home consumption and exports make revenue not for the Government, but for the trusts.

The protective tariff is a wall built high by the trusts to keep out foreign trade; the higher it is built the richer the trusts become, but at the same time the more prosperous the country and the more imports it consumes the greater grow the general revenues of the Government. These funds are today so enormous that Congress does not know what to do with all the money; no man can foresee what will happen should a few lean years visit the country, and no man dares to think of it. In the meantime such thoughts are nervously brushed aside, and Congress is busy finding new ways to spend the enormous sums of money wrested from the prosperous people by means of the high tariff. A few years ago the country was aghast at a billion-dollar Congress, and the expenditure of such a great sum was almost a campaign cry against the party which was so daring. To-day billion-dollar and two-billion-dollar Congresses are so common that no one has time to take notice. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It happens that one of the trusts—and the shipping industry is a trust, in spite of all the croakings and denials—viewing the great prosperity of all its fellows, and thinking that it has not had its rightful share because its profits have been cut down somewhat on account of more active competition with foreigners, raises a great hue and cry. It complains that the tariff has not protected it as it has protected its fellows, and it asks for a cash rebate in order to make good what it loses by competition with foreigners in the foreign trade. This cry appeals to the sorely tried Republican spenders of tariff-raised revenue; it seems to be a good way to spend some of the money which is pouring in in spite of themselves; it is an additional means of hiding the fact that the tariff is bleeding the people.

They dare not admit that the tariff is too high for all practical purposes; that it is raising too much revenue, and protecting industries which have long since grown beyond the need of protection, which have grown so strong that they are reaching out their giant limbs to battle with the commercial nations of the world.

These "stand-patters" can not retrieve themselves by recommending a reduction of the tariff. In spite of all the proofs against them, in spite of defections from their own ranks, they must stand their ground, or admit that their preaching for years has been wrong. They must keep on in the only course which has saved them heretofore, and keep spending the revenues as fast as possible, and the subsidy hunters appear on the scene like life savers. The "stand-patters" embrace them like long-lost brothers, and make them rash promises of great sums of Government cash.

But it looks so much like a barefaced steal that even these "stand-patters" can not be brought to the point of actually voting the money. In spite of their contention that the shipping industry needs protection, that American trade needs developing abroad, that foreign markets are waiting for subsidized American ships to bring American high-priced goods, and that the American people will thus continue to grow happier and happier, the subsidy still looks like a steal, and such a frank and deliberate one that they shrink from the actual committing of the deed.

They want to get rid of the money, and thus save themselves a little longer; they want to stop this cry of a tariff-harmed industry by a cash gag, and keep the people from taking the alarm. But they fear the appearance of the thing. They stand between the devil and the deep sea.

This alliance between the tariff and subsidies is not the only economic evil which threatens the country; it is only the beginning of a series of wrongs and evils, each new one perpetrated for the purpose of covering up the old ones. Not the least of the threatened wrongs following in the wake of subsidies, granted even to relieve the stand-patter conscience of revenue surplus, would be the disarrangement of capital which would naturally result. Even though we are now a creditor nation, it can not seriously be claimed that we have any idle capital or labor; both are fully engaged at present in the development of our own resources, and the profits are very high, so much so that we continue to attract the capital of every other nation, and American securities find an easy mar-The ease with which enormous blocks of securities ket abroad. are disposed of in European centers of finance shows that the high return is no longer a suspicion of their unsoundness, and that Europe wants them. It also proves that we have no idle capital at home, and have to go abroad for the necessary money to keep our industries going.

As capital is attracted to the best paying investments, just as naturally as the compass needle to the north, it will always be found busily employed wherever there are the largest profits. It never seeks new fields until the old ones decline in remuneration, or until the new ones offer at least as good an attraction. If the shipping industry is lagging because of lack of capital, it is because the profits are not there to justify the investment; if the tariff has so eaten up the profits that capital has deserted the business, then the tariff should be so adjusted as to relieve the situation. But instead of this recommendation, the subsidy hunters want a cash return to make up this loss of income, and thus artificially stimulate the profit account. Thus they hope to attract capital once more and in this way revive the languishing business.

This might answer for a time, provided there was plenty of idle capital to be attracted. But as there is no such capital, then the money at present actively earning profits in more natural channels would be falsely lured into the new channel, into a business whose profits are not earned, but taken boldly from the public Treasury. The industries from which the capital would be withdrawn would suffer; they would be crippled for want of working power; their business would fall away, and they would be well started on the road to ruin.

On the other hand, a business propped up by Government assistance would never become self-supporting; the experience of many years, and of many countries, has proven that cash grants can never be dispensed with once the practice has commenced. A self-dependent position is never attained by a business supported in this way; it grows so dependent on the help, or bounty, that it can never get accustomed to its absence. But as the assistance can not run on forever, the time comes when the grant is withdrawn and the business again collapses, the last state being worse than the first.

Thus the capital diverted to the shipping business by means of the false prosperity induced by a bounty, or subsidy, is constantly exposed to this risk and is bound to be impaired, if not altogether lost, in the end. Not only is it withdrawn from its natural channels, but is attracted into unnatural and bad ones; it cripples the business it deserts and loses itself in the business it espouses.

Thus the subsidies work a double harm, and should be most positively condemned by every other paying business now in existence, as well as feared by the hungry beneficiaries of them. They hurt the old and do not help the new friends of their cause; they disarrange the capital provisions of the country, and tend to drag the whole business edifice of the nation from its high and prosperous station.

Thus the evil of subsidies leads the economic conditions of the country from bad to worse; and, as the case has been so often in the past, the legislative tinkerers of business matters merely put off the reckoning for their bad acts by temporarily finding worse ones to occupy the public attention. piling of wrong on wrong is simply sowing the wind, which will be reaped in a terrible whirlwind at no distant day.

It must be admitted that the advocates of these subsidies have convinced many in high quarters, even though they have not caught the public ear. It is true that the general public looks on and listens with indifference so long as nothing definite is done, although if the money was actually voted away they would no doubt wake up and denounce the robbers and their legislative helpers. But failing to arouse the people in one way or another, in spite of paid helpers here and there in the land, they have endeavored to enlist our administrative officials in their propaganda, and thus by the aid of the great ones of the land fool the people into an approval of these subsidies.

Not the least among such convinced advocates is our President, and in his message of January 23 last he states the case as he sees it. A close analysis of the message reveals nothing new in the way of argument or appeal; the same old facts are gone over, even the same old phrases are used. He calls the attention of Congress to the great desirability of enacting legislation to help American shipping and trade by encouraging the building of lines of fast and big steamers to South America and the Orient. He says that between these ports and Europe lines of such steamers, subsidized by their home governments, ply regularly, although none such run between the United States and the ports mentioned. In consequence our shipping in South American ports is almost a negligible quantity and our Pacific lines are seriously threatened by the foreign subsidized lines. The President does not point out how the existence of fast lines of steamers is going to help American trade. He is evidently laboring under the same old delusion—that the paying of mail subventions is bound to create an ocean trade, in spite of the fact that this conclusion has never yet been realized. The experience of England, Germany, France, Japan, and other mari-time nations is so varied and so contradictory that we really could prove that the fast steamers follow the trade just as easily as it could be contended that trade follows the steamers. As has been pointed out so often, the paying of mail subventions, or even subsidies, and the existence of an ocean trade are entirely distinct things and have no direct connection, if any at all, beyond the fact that they are both concerned with ships. The President is merely taking the language of others on this point and can not quote facts and figures to bear out his statements. He has resorted to the same confusion of ideas upon which this subsidy argument is based, and not being an expert on the subject has been misled by the subsidy hunters.

He says the proposed law is in no sense experimental. True but American experiments in this line have been disastrous and scandalous, and if he looked up their history he would hesitate before recommending legislation which would bring down such scandals upon his own Administration. As for the experience of other nations, it proves that the experiment is not worth trying. England and its Cunard Line is quoted as a shining example of the good the law would do; and yet the mail subventioned or subsidized lines of England are but a mere fraction of its shipping strength—about 2 per cent—so small that it is a waste of time, not to say fallacious, to quote such an example.

And how "our trade friendship will be made evident" to the South Americans, as the President assures us, is difficult to Certainly the steaming into their harbors of a few more fast ships will not in itself be an inducement to have them It takes more than fast ships, or a large number trade with us. of them, to establish trade relations or trade friendship. The President desires it to be remembered that while the ships will benefit the coasts, the interior of our country will be benefited by supplying the cargoes; and here is the rub. There will be no cargoes unless the price is right, so that if we wish better trade relations, we must look to a reduction of prices and not to the supplying of swift steamships.

The President urges a careful perusal of Mr. Root's speech before the trans-Mississippi congress, because of its great importance, and in deference to his wishes it might be well to examine it in order to find out what light is thus shed on the vexed question.

The distinguished Secretary of State draws a striking picture of the present economic condition of our own country as well as of the great continent to the south of us. After showing how we have become a creditor nation, after one of the most marvelous developments in all economic history, he shows how South America has also progressed and has at last emerged from the revolution stage into the industrial one. Now that we are looking abroad for new trade worlds to conquer, we find the South American continent ripe for our exploitation. The facts and figures of growth and advancement are a revelation in some cases and convincing in many more. Perhaps the picture is a little overdrawn or slightly imaginative where it deals with the mutual affinities of the two peoples, but while very interesting, it does not affect the conclusions in any way.

But while our relations with South America have heretofore been rather political than commercial, the Secretary feels that the time has arrived when the many prophecies of a great trade intercourse are about to be realized. The most inter-esting prophet he quotes is his great predecessor, James G. Blaine. He believes that the two Americas have now grown up to Blaine's policy, and the United States is now free to follow the pathway marked out by the far-sighted statesmanship of the great son of Maine for its growth in the peaceful prosperity

But to utilize the present ripe condition of things many things must be done; most of them must be done by a multitude of individual efforts and not by government, which can not do them. Among these things are the following: Our merchants should learn exactly what is wanted, even to the grade of goods, and supply nothing else; agents must be dispatched to these countries who speak the Spanish and Portuguese languages; our credit system must be harmonized with theirs; banks should be established; we should acquire the proper respect for them and not treat these peoples as inferiors; capital should be invested in their countries not merely as investments, but as means of creating and enlarging trade; but above all, it is absolutely essential that the means of communication between the two countries should be improved and increased. retary tells us that this latter underlies all other considerations and applies to the mail, passenger, and freight services.

He then tells us, as we have been told so often before, about the fast steamers plying from Europe to South American ports, and of the great ocean carrying trade of these countries, and of the very few fast American ships, and our small carrying trade. He says that the freight charges between South American cities and American cities are generally and substantially higher than between the same cities and Europe. Also, that it is only reasonable to suppose that European steamship lines shall be so managed as to promote European trade in South America, rather than to promote the trade of the United States in South America.

He points out the woeful deficiency in our carrying trade, by stating that instead of carrying 90 per cent of our export trade in our own ships, as we used to do, the percentage has now fallen to 9, the other 91 per cent of export trade being handled by foreigners. The "true and only remedy," he assures us, is the establishment of American lines of steamships, adequate to render fully as good service as is now afforded by the European

We can agree with Mr. Root in all that he says about the condition of the two countries at present and their ripeness for a great trade; we indorse all the measures that he says should be taken to induce this trade. But we can not agree that the true and only remedy is the establishment of fast lines of steamers. These have never yet induced any trade, and this has been pointed out so often that it is surprising that Mr. Root should reiterate it. Where is the proof that fast steamers ever produced trade, of and by themselves, without the help of such things as a monopoly of the markets or the lowest prices? And it is not true that freight rates are higher from our cities to South America than from Europe to the same cities; as a matter of actual fact, on account of the freight wars prevailing among the lines competing for our trade, the freight rates are actually cheaper from our cities. Not only that, but freight rates from our cities to oriental, South African, Australian, and even Mediterranean ports are cheaper than from European cities to the same ports. The Secretary has evidently been misinformed or has culled his facts from the misleading reports in the Merchant Marine Commission publications.

His other contention, that foreign ships would rather work for European trade than for American, is ridiculous: ships are common carriers, more so than any other species of transporting apparatus, and their owners work for profit all the time, no matter from what country the cargo comes. The fact that these ships are competing so actively for our trade that rate wars are in progress is the best proof that they are not snubbing our trade for that of Europe.

If the argument that the decline in our carrying trade from 90 per cent to 9 per cent in our own ships is proof of our woeful deficiency, how can we account for the coincident development of our country, and its present prosperity, beyond all the Why dreams and expectations of even the last generation? talk about woeful deficiency when we are so prosperous? Does the Secretary want to join the little army of calamity howlers in such piping times of peace and plenty?

The only thing the matter with our carrying trade is that our capital has been more profitably engaged at home, making more fabulous profits than could possibly be earned in the ocean trade. If that is a woeful state of affairs, the Secretary will have to start wearing glasses of a different color. [Applause on the Democratic side.

No; the actual existence of ships, even in large numbers and however swift, is no sign of a country's prosperity and will never remedy the defect of a poor foreign trade. On this point the Secretary is mistaken, and his subsequent arguments for more ships fall to the ground. But not to be unfair, we shall examine what he has further to say. He attributes the decline in our foreign trade to two artificial causes—the American tariff and foreign subsidies. As both have been created by Government action, both can be so remedied. As it is out of the ques-tion to talk about reducing the tariff, and we can not induce foreign governments to dispense with their subsidies, there is nothing for us to do but fight subsidies with more subsidies.

He examines three methods of helping the American shipping trade to fight their foreign subsidized competitors. First, the policy of free ships; that is, bringing foreign-built ships under the American flag. He dismisses this with the statement that it would only save the difference in cost of construction, and as this is so slight as to be almost a negligible quantity it would not help American shipping; besides it would needlessly sacrifice all our present industry, and sacrifice it without receiving any substantial equivalent. Surely the Secretary is mistaken in stating that the difference in cost of construction is a slight matter; we are assured on the authority of many experts, quoted by Republican orators, that the cost is quite a vast matter, due especially to the high standard of American wages. Why is there so much contradiction on these points, the cost of ships in American yards being placed high or low as the occa-sion suits? This contradiction leads to the suspicion that there is something in the free-ship policy which is kept back from us and that the subsidy advocates are not fair in its discussion.

Again, the Secretary tells us that some of the European countries have tried the free-ship policy and abandoned it after failing in the experiment. But once more the gentleman is mistaken. For instance, Germany has not abandoned this policy, and some of her best ships have been built in England and used as models for some of her own ships. The cities of Bremen and Hamburg, before their admission to the Empire, were free cities, and their free-ship policy is responsible for their enormous shipping industry. Even to-day they preserve a free zone in their harbors, where all that affects their ships may be admitted without tax or restriction.

If the policy of free ships is to be condemned, it must be on other grounds than those cited by Mr. Root.

His second remedy is the establishment of discriminating tariff duties. This he also dismisses on the ground that we abandoned the system years ago and entered into treaties of commerce and navigation with the principal countries of the world, and to sweep away all these treaties now and to go back to the old system would be to enter upon a war of commercial retaliation and reprisal for the sake of accomplishing indirectly what can be done directly.

We notice that the Secretary's objection to this remedy is one of expediency only. He does not condemn discriminating duties in themselves; in fact, he admits that they will accomplish their purpose, but indirectly instead of directly. Also, that we abandoned this policy years ago.

The great merchant marine that we used to have, and about which there have been so many regrets, and the glory of which we are all trying to reestablish, was built up by discriminating duties; and our merchant marine was killed by the very treaties of commerce and navigation that Mr. Root says we can not now abandon. Why this obstinacy in sticking to a bad policy simply because it happens to be the actually existing one? Does it come from the fact that the tariff has developed the stand-pat frame of mind? Must we stand pat also on our commercial treaties, which have killed our merchant marine?

If Mr. Root is so anxious to have American ships, and he knows that discriminating duties will create them, why not advocate such duties and throw over the treaties? If we must have a fight with foreign nations-that is, a commercial warit might as well be with discriminating duties as with Of course, discriminating duties would, perhaps, open up the tariff question-and that is the real reason why the Secretary puts them aside. The tariff, always the tariff, the Secretary puts them aside. The tarm, always the tarm, always standing like an ugly giant in the way of all true efforts at progress. And whenever the tariff worshipers find that their schemes are interfered with by their idol they immediately resort to subterfuges.

Mr. Root has since advocated the establishment of a double tariff, a maximum and minimum one. Why not extend the principle a little and advocate discriminating tariff duties in favor of imports in American ships, and thus really do something for the merchant marine? Every time a new treaty of commerce embodying the double-tariff arrangement is completed with a foreign government include the ships in the double tariff. If this is objected to, then abandon the treaty. have nothing to fear if all the other facts stated are true. The country is too prosperous to care whether the commercial treaties are in existence or not, and there is little fear that our exports would suffer very much.

The main point is that while we are considering the tariff at all, and especially the double-tariff scheme, we might as well discuss discriminating duties as a help to our shipping. It would be more sincere than endeavoring to help by taking cash from the Treasury and putting it in the pockets of the ship owners and builders. And the Secretary of State would be more consistent and not be obliged to resort to evasions and statements of half-truths in trying to put aside a policy which he knows has been successful while endeavoring to advocate one that has been roundly condemned both within and without his political party.

As a third remedy, he takes up the granting of subsidies, and urges this method as the only proper one to restore to the shippers what the tariff takes away from them. It is easy to see that his whole previous argument has been framed to bring this remedy into the focus as the only one that will work, but the matter of subsidies has been thrashed out so thoroughly that it is not necessary to go over the ground once more and con-demn it in detail. Sufficient to say that some of his facts and figures under this heading are enough to prove the fallacy of his contention. He says England is paying to her steamship lines between six and seven millions a year, while France is paying about eight millions; and yet think of the great disparity between the foreign trade of the two countries. He says we are living in a world not of natural competition, but of subsidized competition; but as only a small fraction of the world's commerce is done in subsidized vessels (in England's case, 2 per cont.) his statement is countradicted. cent; in Germany's, 6 per cent) his statement is contradicted by the facts, the only subsidized competition that we know of being that of our own trusts against foreigners in the world's markets; the subsidy squeezed from our people by the tariff is used to sell our exports at lower prices than foreigners can compete with abroad. The Secretary's statement reacts on his own head like a boomerang. [Applause on the Democratic Subsidies will not create ships, and ships will not produce trade, and Mr. Root's effort to prove the contrary has failed.

When all is said and done, the fact that strikes us most forcibly is the utter uselessness of all legislation along present -that is, the granting of bounties or subsidies or subventions to ship owners or builders. If intended to develop trade and increase the mercantile marine, then the money is thrown away and the time consumed to enact the legislation is wasted. It should be pointed out that while the interests of owners and builders are conflicting, in that the owners want ships as cheaply as possible, while the builders want to sell them at the highest price, yet in our country and under present laws the builders are the only ones who would profit by the bounties or subsidies, because American owners must buy their ships from the American builders at no matter what price. Foreign built ships can not be owned or operated by Americans under our flag; therefore all sums paid to the owners would really have to go to the builders as part of the purchase price. We can therefore limit the further application of the subject to the builders.

If the object of a subsidy law is to increase the building of ships in American yards, it must be shown that the yards at present are idle and the industry almost at a standstill. The facts are really such as to make such a plea ridiculous. As already pointed out, even the report of the majority of the Merchant Marine Committee admits that there is a big boom on in the shipbuilding yards; this fact is reluctantly admitted, however, and an endeavor to minimize it is made by stating that the boom will be over in a year or two. But no reasons are offered for supposing that it will be over, and on the other hand all indications seem to point to a long period of active building of ships for our coastwise and lake service, where we have a monopoly of the business.

In the building of steel ships, when our domestic shipping is included, we find that in tonnage owned and tonnage built we rank second in the list of nations, being beaten only by England, and that by a very small margin. In the construction of war vessels we can take the contracts at lower figures than foreign firms competing for the building of American ships, and in fine yachts, torpedo boats, etc., we are the best in the world. Only in the construction of ships for the merchant service are we outclassed by several of the European countries, especially by England, which beats the world at this kind of building. But England's supremacy is due not altogether to cheapness of labor and material, but more especially to its organization for large production of these vessels and to many technical advantages which result from its perfect organization of this industry.

If we can build steel ships on the Great Lakes more cheaply than on the Clyde, as it is admitted that we do, then there can be no doubt that we could also compete successfully with England in the construction of merchant vessels if we had the proper organization of our coast yards on the same large scale as exists in England. As these conditions are gradually shaping themselves without other help than the natural growth of a demand for ships, it will not be very long before our yards will be contributing their share of ships to the world's commerce.

To hasten this process by subsidies would be to throw the entire economic situation out of its balance and do more harm than good. The demand for ships does not increase in jumps and bounds, but keeps even pace with the growth of commerce. Therefore, if our industry is to be artificially stimulated, it must be at the expense of foreign yards, not so much in the way of ruining them as in bringing about a readjustment of capital and labor. But as this readjustment would be brought about in the natural development of our industries, the uselessness of bounties or subsidies for the purpose should be apparent. On the contrary, the bait of a subsidy would not only induce foreign capital to come into the country in order to get its share, and thus harmfully compete with American capital, but it is certain that some shipbuilding monopoly or combine would be immediately formed, so as to absorb the subsidy without doing the industry very much actual good. But in the long run a bounty can never successfully bring about artificially what will be accomplished in the natural order of things, and while subsidies might stimulate our shipbuilders temporarily, the business would either be weakened for all time by this prop, which might have to be made permanent, or else the American people would be cheated out of the money both ways, by its withdrawal from the Treasury and its going into the coffers of a trust.

It would therefore be better to let our shipyards work out their natural evolution. They are doing excellently at present, as has already been pointed out, and all conditions point to their taking their proper share in the general ship constructing of the world. After all, no Government action can change the fact that if we are to compete with other nations in building and operating ships we must build them as cheaply and at least as good as other countries and operate them as cheaply either by reducing wages to the world's standard or making up the difference by the well-known greater efficiency of American seamen. The cry for subsidies to help the actual building of ships, we must conclude, comes from a hungry combine of Americans anxious to get at some of the surplus revenue produced by the tariff and who use the false reports about the shipbuilding industry as a foil to delude the people while endeavoring to make the grab.

The uselessness of subsidy legislation is also apparent if its object is to provide more ships on the ocean routes, in the hope that trade will follow the flag. The argument seems to be that the more ships there are the more there will be.

But we already have all the ships that are needed for our present commercial needs; true, they do not fly the American flag, but we have more sailings from American ports, especially New York, than the great majority of people are aware of, more particularly to the South American cities, but also to oriental, Australian, and European ports. For instance, to South America, the facts have been given so often that it seems out of place to reiterate them; but with five lines to Brazil, seven to Argentina, and two to Chile and Peru, giving from three to four sailings a week from New York alone, it can be said that there is no lack of transportation. In fact, as some of these ships have to come back empty, as these countries have not always enough to send us, it can be said that the transportation facilities exceed the supply. What need, then, of legislation to supply more ships?

In asking for subsidies, we are not always told that one effect should be the reduction of freight rates; so little is said about it that we may take it for granted that the subsidy is not asked in the interest of the American shipper, but purely for the builder or trust. No compensation is offered to the general people in return for the subsidies except the sentimental one of having the flag fly on more vessels, even though they will probably have to pay higher freight rates on these very same American vessels. The people are thus doubly mulcted; first, by the tariff, which provides the money for the subsidy; then by the shipper in freight rates on exports.

But supposing that we are promised lower freights in exchange for the subsidy, we reply that it is not necessary to grant the subsidies, as freights are even now lower than from European cities to South America, thanks to the active competition among the already existing lines for a larger share of American trade. Even to Chile and Peru freights from New York and other ports are lower than on the English and German lines from Europe, in spite of the fact that no rate wars are in progress to those countries. Once more, what need for subsidy legislation in few of supplications.

But, we are told, the foreign shipowners would work for their home trade in preference to the American trade, and that the existence of national ships thus makes for increased national trade. This is to forget that ships are common carriers, and their owners will take cargoes wherever they are to be had; operating ships is a business, conducted for dollars and cents, and every employer is the same, provided he pays the freights. It is certain that the one paying the highest price or giving the steadiest employment is the one who will get most of the carrying done. We do not hear any complaints about the difficulty of American exporters finding transporta-tion for their goods. This bugaboo may be raised by the subsidy hunters, but, as a matter of fact, there are more facilities for transportation under foreign shipowners than we have need And the American trade is so profitable that foreigners are continually opening new lines for us whenever there is the slightest suspicion of a profit. And the entire foolishness of the argument for national ships becomes plainer the more we realize that the activity of foreign owners in stimulating their home trade is at the same time stimulating our own. merce produces commerce, and is always reciprocal; therefore, no matter which nation owns the ships, the commerce of both is bound to increase. There might possibly be a few cases where the owner of a ship, in some foreign port, might hesitate between a cargo for some European country and one for us, provided the actual compensation would be the same; but pay out subsidies to save such possible emergencies is to make the splitting of hairs a legislative recreation.

As a matter of history, there can be no doubt that the nationality of the owners of the ships has very little influence upon the development of trade, and to insist so much upon it in the effort to secure subsidy legislation is to throw suspicion upon the motive and beneficiaries. It also proves conclusively that it is a waste of time and money to try to induce trade by means of national ships or more of them. Our trade is not suffering for want of transportation or lower freight rates or more American ships. It is suffering from entirely different causes, which can not be cured by subsidies or legislation along similar lines.

If the Government in its wisdom was to build at the people's expense and maintain at public expense a large enough fleet of ships to make a literal highway from country to country, it would still be true that they would remain empty or sail the seas in ballast, for unless we can offer the foreign buyers the goods they want at the proper prices there will never be any trade. Do not let this fact escape attention, for it is the crux of the whole subject. Unless the goods and prices are right, all the ships and subsidies in the world will not create trade; and in view of the soundness of this fact all the foolishness and emptiness of legislation to accomplish this purpose by means of subventions or building ships is clear to even the poorest intellect. Even the flag has no power to make trade unless the goods and prices are correct.

Therefore if we really mean to create more foreign trade, to enter into larger trade relations with other countries, and especially with our South American brethren, we must find ways of reducing our prices and competing with other foreigners. This can not be done by bounties or subsidies, for reasons already explained thousands of times. Of course the tariff enables American manufacturers to sell many things abroad at prices not only cheaper than at home, but even cheaper than the foreigners can offer them in their own homes; but such an extension of this practice as would produce a respectable foreign trade in many lines would entail such a greater increase in the tariff as would break the bounds of American endurance, unless the trusts were willing to accept smaller profits, but even then our people would strenuously object to paying for the privilege the foreigners would enjoy of buying at prices so much lower than those we would be obliged to pay. Therefore bounties or subsidies, or even the high tariff, will not be sufficient to create a foreign trade.

If Congress is really sincere, it might enact legislation such as would help to reduce prices all around, at home as well as abroad, and thus the American people would enjoy some of its fruits, the merchants would enjoy a larger foreign trade, and the demand for ships would naturally increase in proportion, for then there would be need for ships. As a step in this direc-tion we might have discriminating tariff duties in favor of imports in American ships. This would reduce many prices at home, stimulate the demand for ships and their building, and enable the manufacturers to export many things at competing prices which are not now possible.

Then we might adopt the policy of James G. Blaine, which Mr. Root so carefully overlooked while using Blaine's name and prophecy in his argument for subsidies. This is the policy of reciprocity, which also involves a reduction of some of the Foreign-built ships, now owned by Americans, or rather which are operated so as to produce revenue for private Americans, might be allowed American registry. this would not produce trade, it would at least satisfy part of the demand for more ships. And many other methods might be named for developing trade by means of price reduction, but they are not to the purpose in view of the attitude of the subsidy hunters, who want subsidies or nothing.

As the measure before the House is useless, vicious, and dis-honest, I trust with all my heart that it will be signally defeated, to the shame and confusion of its authors and advocates and to the honor and glory of the American people, so well represented here. [Loud applause.]

The question has just been asked by the gentleman from New York what differences there are here as between the bill that is now under consideration and the Senate bill.

To my mind, Mr. Chairman, there is the most decided differ-nce. The Senate bill as it came to the House and to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries was a tonnage subsidy. This bill is a mail subsidy, an entirely different propo-

Mr. FORDNEY. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is there anything about tonnage in the

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, the Senate bill is absolutely tonnage bill and makes no reference to the same reference made in this bill, as I will try to show before I get through.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That was based on the capacity of the

Mr. FORDNEY. I want to be very courteous to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Grosvenor], but I have but fifteen minutes, and I will try to explain that to his satisfaction. If I do not, I want him just to answer me and tear me all to pieces.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not want to tear anybody to pieces. Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; the gentleman does; if my argument is not right he wants to show to the committee that it is not

Mr. GROSVENOR. I was trying to get the gentleman to strike out the word "tonnage" and speak about "cargo."

Mr. FORDNEY. The difference between cargo and tonnage,

Mr. Chairman, I will leave to the committee to decide. minds me of an Irishman who once said to another, "Johnnie, what is the difference between the word 'satisfied' and the word 'contentment?'" He said, "As far as I can see, there is no difference." "Oh, a decided difference," said he. "I am sat-"I am satisfied that the minister is paying too much attention to my wife, but I am not contented by any means." [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the Oceanic Steamship Company, now operating under the act of 1891, operating a line of ships from San Francisco to Australia carrying mail for the United States, and has been operating since the 5th of November, 1891, came before the people in a statement which I hold in my hand, and that company shows that they received the last year before the preparation of this statement, two hundred and ninety odd thousand dollars aid from this Government for carrying mails, giving a twenty-one-day service from the United States, at a point on the coast at San Francisco, to Australia. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] shows a difference in the cost of the labor on that company's ships-and the steamship Sonoma is picked out as a fair example-and he compares the cost of maintaining that ship with the cost of maintaining an English ship and a Japanese ship, and shows that they paid last year $235,400 for all the labor on all their three ships on that line. They show that during the existence of that line to Australia our foreign trade has increased $43,000,000. They claim the credit for that increased trade with Australia.

Now, if that be so, from their own statement they show that they lost last year $373,000 on that line—three ships with a total gross tonnage of 18,495 tons. They received from the Government last year, if based on a tonnage subsidy, $15.79 per gross ton for the three ships. If this bill becomes a law as it is now before the House, and $200,000 additional is given to that line as provided for in this bill, they will receive nearly $27 per gross ton for the gross tonnage of their three ships next year. If, Mr. Chairman, this line of ships has increased our foreign trade in Australia to the extent claimed by that report, and the Government having given that company over $50,000 in subsidy above the entire cost of all the labor on their ships, why in the name of common sense did that line not get its fair share of that trade with Australia and that freight, when they claimed that they did not get enough of any kind of freight to pay for the coal burned in their ships during the To me, Mr. Chairman, it is a most decidedly weak argument for a concern to come in here and say that after the Government has paid the cost of their labor, and all this great increase of trade having taken place, that they did not get their fair share of it, or enough of it, I say, to pay the cost of the coal that they burned.

Let me say to you, Mr. Chairman, as to the cost of carrying the mails of the United States and handling them, compared with all other countries of the world, that this country is only one out of a total of thirty-seven countries that shows a deficit in the handling of the mails. No other country in the world shows a deficit for the handling of their mails beyond three hundred and some odd thousand dollars compared with over eight and one-half million dollars in this country in 1905. Last year this Government paid out for the carrying of our foreign mails three million one hundred thousand and some odd dollars. And the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] undertook to say that we have made a profit in our foreign mails. Let me say to you that I have a tabulated statement here for every single contract between this Government and steamship companies in the world, and out of the total number it shows but one single line that produced a profit to this Government, and that is the Southampton line, which shows a profit of $147,904 for twelve months, but that does not include one single cent for the handling of that mail or any of the mails on shore or up to a point where that mail is shipped by water.

Instead of showing a profit on our foreign mail contracts, there is a total deficit of $355,000 last year. Some gentleman made mention, why was Cape Mendocino put in this bill? Why should we establish mails from the Pacific coast at a point north of Cape Mendocino to South America? I will give you my reasons for it. Cape Mendocino is a point on the Pacific coast about 200 miles north of San Francisco. There is not a port north of Cape Mendocino, except on the Columbia River, until Puget Sound is reached. That provision was put in the bill in order that the committee might secure the support of a Member on that committee from the Pacific coast. tlemen, I want to say to the House—and I say it without fear of successful contradiction, at least—I made a motion in the committee that all reference to Cape Mendocino be stricken from the bill, and it was unanimously carried, and when that bill was brought into the House

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I rise to a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must not refer to action in the committee

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, Mr. Chairman, let me say to you that what I am contending is that this is not the bill that passed the committee. That is the point I am making.

Mr. PRINCE. You have a right to do that. Mr. FORDNEY. If I am not right I want to be corrected about that. All reference to Cape Mendocino was agreed unanimously should be stricken from the bill, and when it was brought into the House Cape Mendocino was in the bill. I do not care what any other man may state, I made that motion and it was carried unanimously. Why should we want to establish a mail line from the Pacific coast to South America from a point north of San Francisco, when San Francisco has a good harbor, and San Pedro, near Los Angeles, has a good harbor also? establish a mail line from Puget Sound to South America, a point 1,000 miles north of San Francisco, is a proposition, in my opinion, the most nonsensical that could be suggested.

Mr. Chairman, because I voted to report this bill from our committee I might be accused of having something to do with its origin. I want to say that this bill, if it ever becomes a law, is one child in our political family; that if I am called its father, is one that the father is not at all proud of [Laughter and applause.] The gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] or the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Grosvenor], I do not know which, is nursing it. You have heard what the mothers have had to say about it. Mr. Chairman, an Irishman once said that to bury a man without a wake is not a decent burial. order to give that language in its correct shape I have it here: To bury a man without a wake is not a decent burial. Then it is the true virtues of the dead are discussed according to the quality of the whisky. The idea of a wake is to put enough whisky into the dead man's friends that they may keep the devil so busy that he might overlook the corpse." [Laughter.]

I want to say of the present measure, gentlemen, that by flowery arguments you are trying to substitute the people of this country for the devil. The merit of this measure, my friends, is at too long range to be correctly observed by me. No merit can be pointed out. Lef me say that all the mailsubsidy contracts that we have to-day have absolutely failed to add one single ship to our foreign merchant marine; and that is the object of the measure. When the Oceanic Steamship Company took its contract to carry the mail from San Francisco to Australia they had at that time three ships in the Australian trade. They then built three fast ships of 16 knots speed and placed the old ships in the coastwise trade. This bill, my friends, excludes all ships on salt water of a speed of

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOULDEN. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more. Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, we have to-day from three to five hundred steamships afloat on salt water that could take advantage of contracts under a tonnage subsidy, but are ex-cluded by this measure. This bill proposes to establish seven different mall lines, which will require some thirty-five ships according to the provisions of the bill, not one of which we have in existence to-day having a limit of speed of 16 knots.

Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that my time is so limited, but I want to say now that before the close of the consideration of this bill I propose at the proper time to offer a substitute. That substitute, in part, is this: It is the Senate bill so far as admiralty subsidy is concerned, and a tonnage subsidy to South

The first six months of 1906-and I have the record here, Mr. Chairman—there were 220 entries and clearances of ships from ports in the United States to South America, of which 87 were clearances. Not one ship that entered or cleared a United States port to or from South America during the first six months of last year carried the American flag. In the three years 1904, 1905, and 1906 the balance of trade against us with South America amounted to over $200,000. I am ready to support some equitable proposition that will help to get a portion of that trade in South America. Let me say to you that in my home town of Saginaw, in the State of Michigan, there is a furniture company that has been making large shipments of its goods to South America, every pound of which has been shipped from Michigan to New York by rail and from New York to England and from England to South America, and I am willing to make an effort to get a portion of that trade. If this plan will do it, I am ready to favor it.

To the Orient last year we had 140 shipments of mail from Seattle, Tacoma, and San Francisco. This bill would exclude every ship now in the foreign trade sailing the American flag on the Pacific Ocean, except the ships that I have named, and there are fourteen magnificent ships running out of Seattle and San Francisco to the Orient and to Australia, not one of which say could receive any benefits under this measure.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GOULDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

RAINEY] ten minutes.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, the arguments in favor of a ship subsidy always commence with the statement that our flag has disappeared from the seas; that a hundred years ago the merchant marine of this country whitened every sea, and that you do not behold it now on any sea. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] also made the same kind of statement a while ago, and said that a hundred years ago the ton-nage of our American merchant marine was as great as it is These misleading statements have gone out over the country, until the people who live in the interior at least have acquired the impression that it is true.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to ask the gentleman if he has quoted the gentleman from New York Did he not say in the foreign trade? I did not understand him to refer to anything except the foreign trade.

Mr. RAINEY. It is not true as applied to the foreign trade.
Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I was not asking whether it was true. I was asking whether the gentleman had quoted the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] correctly.

Mr. RAINEY. I think I quoted him correctly. The RECORD

As a matter of fact, our merchant marine to-day is second in importance and in number of vessels only to the merchant marine of Great Britain. As a matter of fact, the tonnage of our merchant marine to-day is nearly eight times greater than it was in the year 1800, eight times greater than it was in the year 1825, and the kind of statements to which I have referred are absolutely misleading. Why, according to the Commissioner of Navigation we had in commission in our merchant marine in 1903 (and I happen to have the figures for that year only) 4,597 vessels, with a tonnage of 3,064,000 and more. only one country in the world that has a greater tonnage than Germany has almost as much, but has over 2,000 less ships in her merchant marine. Now, assuming that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] limited his statement to vessels engaged in the foreign trade, we had, in the year 1800, 669,921 tons in the foreign trade, and in 1891 we had 1,005,000 tons in the foreign trade. In 1903 we had $88,000 tons in the foreign trade. We had in 1800 engaged in domestic trade a tonnage of 301,000, and to-day, not counting the immense tonnage of the Great Lakes, we have engaged in our coastwise trade over 5,000,000 tons.

Now, these are the facts; and what is the use of creating this sort of an impression throughout the country? Of course we are a bad second to England. She has three times as many vessels in her merchant marine as we have, but she has that many vessels in her merchant marine because years and years ago she abolished her absurd navigation laws; because years and years ago it became possible for an English citizen to buy a ship no matter where it was made, and the materials out of which the ship was built were free no matter where they came from. For a hundred years in this country there has been only three ways in which an American citizen could acquire a shipbuild her in an American shipyard, capture one in war, or prowl along our coasts until he found a vessel wrecked and repair her. Under the repaired-wreck law within the last thirty years we have added over 300 vessels to our merchant marine.

Last year we closed that avenue and abolished that law, and now there are only two ways in which an American citizen can become the owner of a ship. One is to capture her in warand the opportunities for doing that are not very good at the present time-and the other is to build her in our shipyards and pay tribute to the American steel trust.

The statement has been made throughout the country by representatives of the President, and the statement was made here yesterday upon this floor, that we had free raw material with which to build ships; that every stick of timber, every particle of material of any kind that entered into the construction of a vessel in American shipyards was admitted free of That statement is absurd and misleading. not warrant it. We have free raw material for the purpose of building ships to be used exclusively in the foreign trade and for no other purpose, unless the ship is built in American yards for foreign ownership.

I have carefully searched the records, and since that law has been in force the Arthur Sewall Company, of Maine, has been the only company in this country to take advantage of it. other company tried it for a short time. They built the Dirigo up there in Maine out of materials imported free of duty.

I have here a letter from the other company which was foolenough to take advantage of this law, and this is the objection to it, and the reason why it does not add anything to our merchant marine is simply this: That the vessel constructed out of material admitted free of duty is excluded forever from our profitable coastwise trade except during two months in the year. No man wants to pay a million dollars for a ship and have her shut out forever from this profitable trade, and it does not do any good to admit a ship only two months in the year to this trade.

As I stated, here is a letter from the other company which took advantage of this provision of the law. I will print it all in the RECORD, but read only a part of it.

The letter was as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, January 16, 1906.

.Hon. H. T. RAINEY, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Hon. H. T. Rainey,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Replying to your letter of the 6th instant, addressed to the Pacific Shipping Company, relative to a bill introduced by you providing for free material for constructing, repairing, and equipping ships, we submit the following opinion in regard to it:

The only material that would be imported in bond for such work would be steel plate, machinery, boilers, etc., and there is a question in my mind if this would be done to any appreciable extent; however, as a general move toward the reduction of the price of steel in this country, we are of the opinion that your bill is a good one, as it would be an entering wedge in forcing the steel trust to lower its price. A few days ago a shipbuilder in San Francisco informed the writer that he could buy steel plate in China for 1 cent a pound less than what he paid for it in San Francisco. This is due probably to competition from Belgium and other points.

Referring to the bill of 1894, providing for the free entry of material for constructing American vessels to be used only in foreign trade, would say that the writer has had some experience with this bill and at one time was master of an American schooner coppered with metal out of bond. The vessel was allowed sixty days out of the year to coast and the balance of the time was obliged to go foreign. It kept us in hot water continually trying to keep within the sixty-day limit and thereby save the duty on the copper, and we were very glad when the copper was old enough to be condemned. We took off the foreign metal and put on American metal and have never tried the experiment since.

Regarding the cost of material for vessels, it is a fact that on this coast wooden steamers of very small tonnage are built for coasting business, and we think that the price per ton for building is probably higher than at any other place in the world; yet the vessels are able to make good interest on this great cost. The cost of the material in a ship does not matter so well, and the price of a vessel deptades.

Private reports from the East state that the merchant-marine bill will probably fail. The opinion on this coast is that after the way it has been remodeled it is not as favorable as first intended. More favor is being shown toward the Sulzer bill that we understand is to be introduced. Hoping that the above is in line with what you desire,

Yours, truly,

PACIFIC SHIPPING Co.,

PACIFIC SHIPPING Co., TIBBETTS.

Now, I have had a bill pending in this House before the Ways and Means Committee for four years, and have not been able to get a hearing on it, providing for free raw material for ships and the material that goes into repairs on a ship. prepared to show that if material were admitted free 33 per cent of the actual cost of a vessel could be saved. We built out of American material the Minnesota and the Dakota, ships engaged entirely in the foreign trade. Why did not this company take advantage of this law and build those vessels out of material admitted free of duty? It cost a million dollars more to build those two ships out of American material. Because during all the life of these vessels—and they might remain in operation for twenty-five or thirty years—it would be impossible to use either of them in our profitable coastwise trade, and that was the reason. We have here almost under the Dome of this Capitol the largest shipbuilding company in the world, employing six or seven thousand men every day in the year. near here the largest dry dock in the world.

The Minnesota and the Dakota, completed in American shipyards, are the largest ships that ply the seas at the present time, and not two years ago we finished up the Mongolia and the Manchuria in American shipyards, and in all the world there are only six more important ships than these, and we own two out of those six. Tell me that the shipbuilding industry in this country is passing into decay! You give us free raw material for ships and you will find out that our shipbuilders can compete with any of these companies over in England.

Vessels of 20 tons and under are simply licensed; vessels of 20 tons and over engaged in the coastwise trade are both licensed and enrolled, and vessels engaged in the foreign trade are registered. A vessel engaged in the foreign trade must surrender its registry if it wants to engage in our profitable coastwise trade, and whenever it surrenders its registry it is compelled to pay duty on every item of material that goes into the repairs on that vessel if she has been repaired in a foreign port, and for that reason it seldom happens that vessels surrender their registry and take out a license and enrollment. In order to show how absurd these shipping laws of ours are I want to call attention to the fact that vessels in operation upon the Great Lakes and upon our northern frontiers can only be licensed and enrolled. They alone of all our vessels that are simply licensed and enrolled can stop at foreign ports under the law; but if they are repaired in foreign ports they must pay the duty on the repairs as soon as they come back. Up there along the St. Lawrence River the Thousand Islands and St. Lawrence River Steamboat Company, an American company, is operating a line of boats in opposition to the Canadian lines. There is no place on this side of the river where those boats can be repaired.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
The committee will rise informally in order that a conference report may be considered in the House.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURRIER, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 529, the shipsubsidy bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the postoffice appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, and that all amendments be disagreed to, that a conference be requested, and, without intervening motion, the conferees be immediately appointed.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second. Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Indiana is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Georgia to twenty min-

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the Senate has amended in some respects the post-office appropriation bill. That bill is now upon the Speaker's table, and in order to expedite its consideration and avoid any unnecessary delays, I have asked that it may be sent to a committee of conference. yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, the leader of the minority members of the committee, such time as he may desire. This motion is made after consultation with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon], and I therefore yield to him.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I would ask the gentleman who demanded the second to take some time, if he desires to do so.

Mr. GRIGGS. I do not desire to say anything at this time. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recog-

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I agree very fully with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET]. tention over this bill has been such in the past that if the motion of the gentleman is not sustained and this bill goes back to the Post-Office Committee, where it must go under the rules, for further consideration, I fear that we will be unable to bring it out during this session. It is a matter that is proper for conference, and, in my judgment, it ought to be settled in conference. I believe it is impossible for the Post-Office Committee, composed as it is, to reach any conclusion on these matters within a reasonable time, and then when the bill is reported back to the House it opens up all of the discussion upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses in this body again. In the interest of economy and time and for proper adjustment of the differences between the two Houses it appears to me to be the sensible thing to commit this bill to conference on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET].

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, it is unnecessary for me to say that I have every confidence in the chairman of this committee and in the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon], who has just spoken in favor of this motion, both of whom will be on the conference committee on this bill. I also have every confidence in the strength of the opinions of those gentlemen on certain questions, and, having that confidence and believing exactly to the contrary of the action of the House when this bill was rushed through under a rule, without opportunity to discuss or amend it, I deem it my duty, even if it may seem obstructive in its nature, to inform the House that it may, if it sees fit to agree with me, now come to a vote on concurring in at least two of the Senate amendments. I refer, Mr. Chairman, first to that amendment which increases the salary of rural free-delivery carriers from $720 to $900. The House a few days ago, under a rule which permitted no amendment and which permitted no discussion of the merits of the question before the House, adopted $840 as the salary of rural free-delivery carriers. Members of the House of Representatives have simply to read the report of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General on this subject in order to know that these servants of the people, who go through sunshine and storm, through heat and through cold, who must furnish their own equipages, who must supply every-thing required to enable them to fill their positions—I say you have only to read the report of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, indeed, I go further, and say that you have only to consult your own common sense in order to understand that these carriers are entitled to $900 a year at least. [Applause.] In order to secure the position he must first invest in two horses and a vehicle. That means at present cost the investment of at least $500. These men must purchase animals and vehicles sufficient to do the work they are required to do. Thus comes the first investment, and it is easy to calculate the interest on that. Now, then, the chance of loss by death or accident, the ordinary wear and tear of the horses and vehicle, and the feed and care for the horses bring the cost to the carrier to at least

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. GRIGGS. I do; but talk fast, please.

Mr. POU. Permit me to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that since this service was inaugurated the cost of horses has increased about 50 per cent.

Mr. GRIGGS. I understand that, and I think I am treating the House fairly by giving the original cost to a carrier of $500, and I think my friend from North Carolina will agree with me on that proposition. Now, with the cost of wear and tear, the likelihood of accident, and the cost of food, I think I have put it at a very low estimate when I estimate it at $250 per annum. Two hundred and fifty dollars per annum from $840 leaves $590 for their services. Five hundred and ninety dollars to go every day through the storm, through the cold, through the heat, and sometimes on almost impassible roads in the winter. These men are required every day to do this for a salary of $590. I do not believe there is a man in this House who will insist that this is sufficient pay for the services rendered. Now, then, I have demanded this second in order to oppose the motion of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Over-STREET], so that I may move to concur in the Senate amendment making it $900. Now, then, why not, if we believe in this, get rid of it now. Why should it be sent to the gentlemen who are going to be members of the conference committee? we leave it for another report from them? Why should we pass it over now, to deprive ourselves later of an opportunity of a separate vote upon this question? If you are in favor of increasing the salary of the carriers from $720 to $900 you will vote with me, and vote this motion of the gentleman down; and that will give us the opportunity to find out—
Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman permit me for a moment?
Mr. GRIGGS. If the gentleman will talk fast.

Mr. SULZER. Does your motion also contemplate letter carriers and post-office clerks?

Mr. GRIGGS. No, sir. It includes nobody, but I am perfectly willing to take them in. In other words, the House will be free to concur in all of the amendments of the Senate. my friend from Tennessee's suggestion that to send this bill back to the Post-Office Committee would probably prevent the passage of the post-office bill at this session-

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Oh, I did not suggest anything of Mr. GRIGGS. I understood that.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I said it would take up a good deal of time, and we might economize time and save trouble by it.

Mr. GRIGGS. Take up the time, Mr. Speaker, of only eight-een Members of the House—the members of the committee?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I said I thought this bill would pass regardless of what the gentleman or myself might say.

Mr. GRIGGS. Now, I am very sure, and this House is very sure, that the course taken by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads will pass the bill. But if he does undertake the other course, then I will fight it in committee and we will vote for $900, if referred again to the Post-Office Committee.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that it goes there automatically, if anybody objects here.

Mr. GRIGGS. Then in the Post-Office Committee we will make it $900 a year, and I would just as soon have it go back there as not. Why should the House worry about that? We can dispose of this question in fifteen or twenty minutes. did not know the parliamentary situation, as my friend from Illinois [Mr. Mann] suggests. I really have never had a very high opinion of more than one man who had any knowledge of parliamentary law, and I do not refer to my friend from Illinois, because he has very little more knowledge of it than I

Mr. MANN. I always yield to my learned friend in parliamentary knowledge.

Mr. SIMS. Let me ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GRIGGS. If you will ask it quickly.
Mr. SIMS. If this motion is voted down, could not the for rural carriers and then send all the rest of the amendments to conference?

Mr. GRIGGS. Certainly; all of it will go to conference if the House so determines. There is another amendment the House ought to have an opportunity to vote on right now, and that is the amendment of the Senate, known as the "Murdock amendment," the proposition offered in the committee, and known throughout the country as the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK]. This provides for making the weighing by the Post-Office Department of the mails speak the truth. That is all there is to it. That amendment provides that if you weigh the mails for a certain number of days, you shall use that number of days as a devisor to ascertain the average, and I defy any man to show me any rule in mathematics, in law, or in reason to use six as a divisor in order to obtain the average of seven daily weighings. All we ask upon that question is that these figures be made to speak the truth. You know they say figures do not lie, and they do not if they are made right; but if they are not right, they lie, and, as General Toombs, of Georgia, said once, "like the devil."

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Eight minutes

Mr. GRIGGS. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from

Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK]

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, as the post-office bill came originally to the House committee it had four provisions in it. By a special order two of those provisions were exposed to a point of order and two were saved from possible points of order. One of the provisions was the divisor proposition just mentioned by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Griggs]. Yesterday the divisor proposition went back into the bill in the Senate and was in the bill when the Senate passed that bill: Now, as the bill left the House, after final action by the House, the railway mail pay was cut in the region of two and one-half to three millions of dollars. As the bill left the Senate, after final passage through the Senate last night, railway mail pay is cut about $8,000,000. If you vote up the motion now to suspend the rules, I believe that every man here who votes for this motion made by the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads will vote to cut railway mail pay about $3,000,000. If he votes down that motion and against that motion, he cuts off an opportunity to concur in the Senate amendment and cut railway mail pay about $8,000,000. The issue is plain. I would like to see every Member of the House on record on that issue. The railway mail pay, which is the biggest thing in this bill, and which is one of the biggest single items of expenditure in any government, has been under impeachment for thirty-three years. It has been condemned time after time by Postmasters-General, and its correction has been attempted by four different commissions, each commission ending in a dog fall. Now, this Congress has come up to the point of cutting down the railway mail pay. Are you going to side step the opportunity or are you going to be courageous and cut it what ought to be cut? That is all I have to say.

Mr. GRIGGS. I would like for the gentleman from Indiana to use some of his time.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

Seventeen minutes. The SPEAKER.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I differ from my friend from Kansas who has just spoken. The orderly course of procedure requires that this bill be sent to conference. The gentleman from Kansas assumes that the conference committee will reject both the amendments referred to. This is where he errs. We do not know what the conference committee will do, and we have no right to assume that it will reject either of these amendments.

Once or twice during every session of Congress when a bill comes back from the Senate with amendments some one insists that we must concur at once in the amendments or unutterable woe will follow. Do you remember the statehood bill of a year ago? Some gentlemen were fairly hysterical in their efforts to force the House to concur in the Senate amendments. But the House sent the bill to conference and the result proved the wisdom of this course.

So, Mr. Speaker, it will not do to say with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murdock] that to vote in favor of the pending motion is to vote to leave the compensation of railroads and letter carriers as the House fixed it; to vote for the motion is to favor sending the bill to conference, nothing more and nothing less. When the conference committee reports to the House, House concur in the Senate amendment on that increased pay we shall have ample opportunity to act if the report is not satisfactory. And so, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of sending the bill to conference.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Greene]

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Speaker, speaking for myself, and I think for a large number of the Members of this House, I believe that the proper course to pursue would be to send the bill to conference. Speaking for those affected by the increases of salary put upon the bill, I personally and heartily approve the action of the Senate. I believe they have made a wise decision in the changes that have been recommended in the amendment of the Senate. I hope the result will be that the committee will conclude to agree with the Senate and recommend that this House shall concur in their action. But whether they do or do not, the bill itself will be in the control of this House, and when it comes back here, if they do not agree, then other action may be taken different from that which is now proposed. But it does seem to me that the proper course for this House to pursue with this bill is to send it to conference and let it be fairly considered there. The proposition made in regard to the raise of pay of the carriers, clerks, rural free-delivery carriers, and railway mail clerks I believe to be wise and proper and dealing justly with a large number of Government employees, who should have been recognized many years ago as they have been by the action of the Senate in the amendment of the bill. I certainly hope that everyone who believes in what has already been accomplished will at this stage of the proceedings vote to send the bill to conference.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I take it that the matters of greatest importance in the way of difference between the House and Senate in the post-office appropriation bill are, first, the increase of the pay of the rural carriers. I have stated in this presence, and I state now, that I am heartily in favor of the Senate provision. I believe it is right; I believe it is proper. Next, the amendment incorporated in the Senate embedying that which is known here as the "amendment of the gentleman from Kansas," my colleague on the Post-Office Committee [Mr. Murdock]. These two items, as I understand, are the two most important amendments placed by the Senate on the post-office appropriation bill. The question before the House is whether or not it is better to send the bill to conference, or whether the bill should go to the Post-Office Committee for report. The Post-Office Committee passed on these questions when it reported the post-office appropriation bill. I believe that this House will be given an opportunity to vote on these Senate amendments. When the bill goes to conference, in the event there is no agreement between the House and the Senate conferees, this disagreement will be reported to the House, and then it will be in order to move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments, and agree to the same, or to any one of them. That is the course of procedure that has operated here, as I remember, usually and generally, and that is the direct and usual way of procedure. that every purpose will be served by sending the bill to conference, and each and every Member of the House, I believe, will have an opportunity to voice his views by his vote on these questions

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 24815) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Proctor, Mr. Hansbrough, and Mr. Simmons as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I yield two minutes to the

Mr. STEENERSON, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the best thing we can do is to support the chairman's motion to let this bill go to conference. I do not believe that the results to be achieved by the so-called Murdock proposition will be as great as the gentleman thinks. Theoretically the only thing to be accomplished by it is a reduction of mail pay of 14 per cent on all routes. That is the assumed result, but in view of the fact that under the provision put on in the Senate a new weighing in every division will be necessary, and in view of the fact that in most divisions the mail increase in the last a new weighing upon all routes next year we would lose almost as much as we would gain by the increased divisor. Yes; I will go further and say we would lose more. So it also seems to me we would only rush into unnecessary complications. The contracts for the division weighed last year run for four years. If you adopt this limitation put on in the Senate you will repudiate that contract, because the basis of pay is determined by the average daily weight as determined under the old system. I do not believe that the gentleman is justified in saying that we are opposed to a reduction of railway mail pay because we vote to put this bill in conference. I favored a greater reduction of railway mail pay than that accomplished by this bill. I favor a greater reduction, but I do not believe that we will accomplish that reduction by adopting the Senate provision. I therefore hope that the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Overstreet] will be carried.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I hope the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Griggs] will consume the balance of his time.

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that the gentleman from Vermont should favor what he was pleased to call the "orderly procedure" of the House in this instance; but I am surprised that a gentleman of the knowledge of postal affairs of my friend from South Carolina [Mr. Finley] and on all par-liamentary questions should insist that the motion of the gentle-man from Indiana [Mr. Overstreet] is the "orderly procedure" of the House. The "orderly procedure" is the usual Republican procedure

Mr. FINLEY. It is the procedure that my friend has always acquiesced in heretofore.

Mr. GRIGGS. Certainly, until I got ready to do otherwise; until I found it to be in the interest of the country for somebody to oppose it, and for the first time this session I have taken the floor in order to see if the House would not grasp the opportunity of doing what is right regardless of "orderly procedure. The "orderly procedure" on this question would be to send it to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, as my friend from Illinois [Mr. Mann] has stated, and the gentleman from Illinois has increased my respect for parliamentarians this morning. As he suggested, the "orderly procedure" in this case would be for the bill to go to the Post-Office Committee, and then let that committee report the bill and amendments back to the House. But it will not have to go to the Post-Office Committhe if we vote for this motion. My friend from South Carolina [Mr. Finley] says he agrees with me in toto on these questions, but he does not believe-

Mr. FINLEY. I was for the proposition before he agreed with me that the salary of rural carriers ought to be $900.

Mr. GRIGGS. No; I deny that. My friend is mistaken about that. I am perfectly willing, though, for him to have all the credit on that line that he wants. I shall not take one flower from the wreath that I hope will be placed upon his brow; in fact, I will help make it.

Mr. JAMES.

Mr. JAMES. In South Carolina? Mr. GRIGGS. Yes; in South Carolina. But if he agrees with me, why does he not vote with me? If he believes it is right to pay carriers $900, he can help me give carriers $900 in the next twenty minutes. Yet my friend says that he loves "orderly procedure" far above the rural free-delivery carriers, and "orderly procedure" is the extraordinary motion of the gentleman from Indiana to suspend the rules and send the bill to conference.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, this motion one way or the other will not give them $900.

Mr. GRIGGS. It gives an opportunity to do it. Mr. FINLEY. You will have an opportunity. Mr. GRIGGS. Can you promise that we will?

Mr. FINLEY. When I state that I believe you will have that opportunity I state what I believe.

Mr. GRIGGS. We have all at times assumed too much of the report of a committee. There was a row in the House the other report of a committee. There was a row in the House the other day because gentlemen did not get an opportunity, as was pledged to them by a member, to vote on one or two of several propositions that were reported here as a whole. As my friend from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] said just now, these gentlemen are going to do what they please with this matter, regardless of what you or I may assume they are going to do, and they are opposed to $900 salary.

Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman mean to say that the gentleman from Tennessee, who will be on the conference committee.

Mr. GRIGGS. Oh, no; the gentleman told the truth when the fact that in most divisions the mail increase in the last he said that the conference committee would do what it pleased four years was 50 per cent, or 12½ per cent a year, if we had regardless of what he and I thought.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman from Georgia is mistaken. I did not say anything about the conference committee. I said the House would pass the bill regardless of what the gentleman from Georgia or I thought about it.

Mr. GRIGGS. Very well; I will add to that that the conference committee vote will do what it pleases without regard to what any minority member, either of the House or the Senate, may demand. That is my assumption. Now, gentlemen, there is another amendment to which the gentleman from New York has called my attention. That is the Senate amendment which affects the city carrier service and the post-office clerks. That ought to be voted on in this House. We ought to have an opportunity occasionally to vote on some of these questions alone, separated from every other question and every other interest. This is the first time in several years that the House has had an opportunity to take the bit in its teeth and say that we will declare for what the House believes to be right, the opportunity to vote that up which we favor and vote that down which we oppose. It does not do, if you really favor these things, if you are really in earnest about it, to repose too much confidence in what somebody else is going to do. If the House favors these things, why not let the House adopt them now? Why go through the procedure, orderly or disorderly, of sending it to conference when we in thirty minutes can pass every one of these propositions? If the majority of the House agrees with me on these questions, you will vote this motion down and give me the opportunity to move to concur in the Senate amendments. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads of the House is composed of eighteen members; the subcommittee which prepared the post-office appropriation bili is composed of seven members. While little, if any, politics has ever entered into any measure considered by that committee since my connection with it, nevertheless that subcommittee of seven is divided between the two parties—four of the majority, or Republican party, and three of the minority. The three members of the minority party are the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon], the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Finley], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Gricks]. Two of the members of these three are advocating this motion. Since my connection with this committee, Mr. Speaker, there has proved by the provider of the second statements. committee, Mr. Speaker, there has never been any preparation of any part of the post-office appropriation bill nor any procedure between the two Houses but what I have first called the matter to the attention of the senior member of the minority [Mr. Moon], in whom I have the greatest confidence and with whom I have labored with pleasure as well as with profit. And so, before making this motion to-day, complying with that practice of mine, I consulted with him and later with the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] after he entered the Cham-

We are in practically this situation: This measure as it passed the House carried over $209,000,000, and the Senate has added forty-one amendments. And now in four working days the session closes, and we find ourselves confronted with the situation under which we must either send the measure to conference to be determined by that committee, or, failing in that, by voting down the motion I have made, automatically the bill goes back to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and then, after the committee has considered the forty-one amendments of the bill, it must come back into this House and automatically go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, there to be taken up, an amendment at a time, until all have been disposed of; and even then a con-ference must be had unless the House should agree to all the forty-one amendments placed upon the bill by the Senate.

Now, Mr. Speaker, any Member who has been here as much as half of a session understands that all legislation is more or less a result of compromise. When this measure was before the House last week, after we found some measures which were subject to a point of order, and concedealy so, we recommended to the House that we pass upon this under a rule which would avoid the necessity of their going over until the next session of Congress. It was not any disposition to sidetrack these propositions nor to avoid a fair consideration of them, but the exigencies of the situation compelled that action if we were to obtain practical results.

Now, it has been said by the gentleman from Tennessee that this bill of course must pass this Congress, that it must pass if the postal facilities during the next fiscal year are to be main-

But this is different from the ordinary appropriation bills. It has occurred in many instances where there has been a failure of a great appropriation bill that a simple resolution has been agreed to continuing existing appropriations during the following year; but, sir, by reason of the rapid growth of the postal service, the necessities for increased appropriations make it utterly impracticable for us to continue appropriations for that service by a simple resolution. Therefore, if by reason of any complication, by reason of delays or entanglements within the House Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads or the Committee of the Whole, or such delays in conference as would make a failure of this legislation, it would necessitate the calling of an extra session, in my judgment, or otherwise the postal facilities would be impaired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: I want to know, if this motion carries—and I am anxious that the bill should be accelerated—and the bill is sent to conference, is there any machinery by which the House can get an opportunity to vote upon any particular amendment of the Senate-for instance, the increase of the salary of the rural carriers?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, all that I can say in answer to that is that there are many contingencies Mr. MANN. I would say that there is machinery.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not ask the gentleman to make any pledge. Perhaps he misunderstands my purpose. I simply want to know if there is a way or if there is not a way by which that can be reached?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I should say yes; that there are ways. Just what they are I am not prepared to state. Mr. BARTLETT. Then to vote for this motion to suspend the rules and send this bill to conference at once, and in that way accelerate its consideration, would not mean to vote against the increase?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I think the gentleman is entirely correct about that.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to vote for that increase,

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. It is not fair for the House to be led into the idea that a vote to send this bill to conference means a vote against any of the amendments put on by the

Mr. GRIGGS. I hope my friend from Indiana does not want to misrepresent me. I made the only remark upon that ques-

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Oh, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murdock] is the gentleman to whom I refer, and I think he will take no exception to what I have stated. Mr. Speaker, we are in this situation—that we are within four days of adjournment, with the largest appropriation voted upon by this Congress under consideration. There may be individual Members who are opposed to certain amendments or who are in favor of other amendments, and the question is, Shall we endanger the situation of the entire bill by forcing it back into the Committee of the House on the Post-Office and Post-Roads or shall we rather take the practical method and send the bill to conference, to be considered in the ordinary way under the rules which have obtained in all of these other emergencies?

Mr. HAUGEN. I would like to inquire if the bill has been amended so as to affect the rate on second-class matter in the Senate?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I do not think so.

Mr. HAUGEN. As it passed the House it did not affect the rate on second-class matter.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. No; there is a amendment in regard to coupons in newspapers, but I do not think that affects the rate on second-class matter in the way the gentleman means.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is there any amendment by the Senate affecting the pay of transportation companies?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. There is the amendment commonly known as the "Murdock amendment," which is not, I may say, exactly the Murdock amendment. It has been changed very decidedly, in my judgment.

Mr. Speaker, I do not care to take further time of the House, which has already been encroached upon by this action this afternoon, but I do wish to suggest to Members the importance of an orderly method of procedure in carrying this bill to conference. The ordinary rule is to permit the appointment of conferees by unanimous consent, but that would need only one objection to defeat it, and therefore I resorted to the only remaining practical method.

Mr. WALLACE. I wish the gentleman, in the close of his remarks, would impress upon this House and the country the necessity for the improvement of roads in that connection, which would largely solve the problem. [Laughter and applause.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.
